LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

King of the Atlantic

Sirs:

Joseph J. Thorndike Jr.'s Close-up of Admiral King (LIFE, Nov. 24) has brought back memories of my brief and limited association with the Admiral while he was Commander Aircraft Scouting Force with the U. S. S. Wright as his flagship.

Here is one: The Wright was anchored in a cove on the West Coast tending seaplanes; a plane was being sent back to San Diego in which the Admiral and his flag lieutenant were passengers. In taking off, the plane crashed (no loss of life) and its occupants had to swim for a while until the crash boat picked them up. The boat approached the flag lieutenant who, instead of allowing himself to be taken into the boat first, grasped the gunwale and turned to assist the Admiral into the boat, whereupon the Admiral is reported to have said, "Dammit this is no time to stand on ceremony. Get into the boat."

(NAME WITHHELD)

Portsmouth, Va.

● Name has been withheld at request of reader, who is a naval officer. But LIFE reminds its readers that it is reluctant to print unsigned letters.—ED.

Sirs:

Isn't it strange that Admiral of the Atlantic King, a daring model of a war commander, still wears the old cap device with the eagle facing the left when regulations call for it facing the right?

J. AULD

Washington, D. C.

● Change in uniform regulations reversed the eagle from left to right to comply with heraldic mythology, which describes the eagle sinister as cowardly, the eagle dexter as courageous. Admiral King and most naval officers have around $1,500 invested in uniforms. At $25 each, it will take some time before the Admiral has completely replaced his supply of caps.—ED.

Sirs:

Mr. Thorndike speaks of the Admiral's six daughters as, well, just women. Here, however, is a picture of the Ad-

Capable "Flo" King last fall forsook the life of a glamor gal and is working eight hours a day, shuttling back and forth between Eastern's information, reservations and control-charts departments. She is doing a great job, too, according to Station Manager J. A. McDearmid. When she has thoroughly mastered her present job she will take up flying.

Do You See a Girl in a Pageant?
No. I see a Future Star of the Stage.

Is She Beautiful?
No, but She has Charm and Personality.

It's her Smile that's so Appealing—a Smile she has always given the Daily Care of Ipana and Massage.

Your smile is what you make it! Let Ipana and Massage help you to have healthier gums and brighter, more sparkling teeth

A Product of Bristol-Myers Company

Q. What have healthy gums to do with a brighter smile?

A. Just this: many modern dentists tell us that firm, strong gums are vitally important to sound, sparkling teeth...that weak, sensitive gums tend to make teeth dull and dingy.

Q. What can be done to help gums?

A. Regular, daily gum massage—that is what most dentists recommend. For today's soft, creamy foods do not give our gums sufficient work and stimulation. Gums are apt to become weak, tender...and frequently flash a tinge of "pink" on your tooth brush.

Q. Is "pink tooth brush" a dangerous condition?

A. "Pink tooth brush" is a warning that may or may not mean serious trouble ahead. But only your dentist can decide that. He may merely say that your weakened gums need more work and resistance. And, like thousands of dentists, he may well suggest the helpful stimulation of Ipana and massage.

Q. How should Ipana be used for most effective aid?

A. Every time you brush your teeth, massage a little extra Ipana onto your gums. Do this faithfully, every day! For Ipana not only cleans teeth brilliantly but, with massage, it is specially designed to help make gums firmer and stronger. That is why you'll find the modern dental health routine of Ipana Tooth Paste and massage so effective in helping you to ward off "pink tooth brush"...in helping you to have healthier gums and a brighter, more sparkling smile.

It's a shame about Sarah...
she's such a swell girl otherwise!

So pretty, such good company, yet most of the time she was overlooked when party invitations were going out. It might have been different if she paid just a little bit more attention to the "Double O."

Look Out For "Double O"

Competition is just as keen in the social world as it is in business, and a girl who is not careful about "Double O" (Offensive-looking teeth; Offensive breath) is certainly trying to go places the hard way.

Fortunately there is a precaution against this double offense... a wonderfully delightful precaution which many popular people insist on daily.

What To Do About It

For the teeth, the new Listerine Tooth Paste. Here's a dentifrice made especially to help bring out the natural sparkle, the clean, flashing brilliance of your smile.

New Tooth Paste... New Formula

The new Listerine Tooth Paste is a delightful new formula that attacks cloudy loose deposits, goes to work on dull, dingy teeth. Many say they can actually see its beautifying effects in a surprisingly short time.

And for the breath—Listerine, of course. It halts food fermentation in the mouth, a frequent cause of halitosis (Offensive breath).

Delightful Daily Double

If you want to help your personality, don't neglect the "Double O." Start in today with the delightful Listerine "daily double": the new Listerine Tooth Paste for a clean, attractive smile, and Listerine Antiseptic for a more appealing breath.

Hohenzollern heir to observe the Battle of Verdun, some 35 kilometers away across the hills. I took this picture following the capture of Montfaucon in September 1918 by the Yanks on the second day of their great Meuse-Argonne drive that ended the war.

The observation post, as can be seen in the picture, was a heavily re-inforced concrete tower, built inside the house from cellar to attic, with a narrow opening at the top. This opening, which can also be seen, cuts across a corner of the tower facing toward Verdun.

Sirs:

The T. Laughton Johnson painting at West Point, described by Reader Levine in Letters to the Editors (LIFE, Nov. 24), is not the largest single-panel mural in the U. S.

John Banvard painted a panorama of the Mississippi River on a canvas three miles long. It was mounted on revolving drums that were slowly unrolled before spectators to "exhibit a view of country over 3,000 miles in length extending from the mouth of Yellowstone on the Missouri, and the Little Miami on the Ohio, to the city of New Orleans... being by far the largest picture ever executed by man." They have endeavored to provide three Service Clubs, which are not only clean and conveniently located, but more than adequate in the purposes for which they were created.

Soldiers and sailors are frequently invited into private homes, and on Thanksgiving Day every man in the service in the city of Portland, due to the untiring efforts of Portland committees, had the opportunity to partake of a turkey dinner in a private home.

LIFE'S COVER

When this picture of Patricia Peardon was taken last October on the roof of Radio City's Time and Life Building, she was not yet famous. She was then a 16-year-old New York girl who had just received her first part in a Broadway play (see p. 103). Though still starry-eyed about her "big chance," she looked forward to opening night with considerable trepidation. Now, opening night has come and gone. Both Junior Miss and Patricia Peardon, who plays the title role, are hits. But not till the run of the play is over and she has learned "lots more about the stage," will Patricia heed the movie scouts clamoring at her door.

SPEAKING OF PICTURES . . .
. . . THESE ENGLISHMEN FOUGHT IN CRIMEA

Where the German Army is now smashing at the defenses of Sebastopol in the Russian Crimea, the last army to fight the Russians was the Allied Army of British, French and Turks in the Crimean War during the winter of 1854-55. The Crimean War was a badly-run war but it produced modern nursing in Florence Nightingale, the raglan overcoat (named for the British general in command) and a famous poem, Tennyson's The Charge of the Light Brigade (1854).

The picture above of British survivors of the Crimean War was taken in July 1909. At the far left, the two whiskered Hussars with a noticeable lift to their heads are the two last survivors of the Light Brigade at Balaclava. The others are from other units. The sailors are easy to distinguish. The men with the parallel white froggings across their chests and the white pompons are infantrymen. The man with the white broom in his bushy (third from right) is a member of the Horse Artillery.

Last survivor of the 600 of the Light Brigade, who made the charge "into the jaws of death," was Troop Sergeant Major Edwin Hughes, 13th Hussars, who died in May 1927 at the age of 96. The last Crimean War veteran to survive was Color Sergeant James Gray of the Royal Marines, who died only two years ago, aged 102.

where’d you GET your gun?”

FROM the supply sergeant, of course. He got it from the Ordnance Department—and they got it from a factory. It’s the finest Army rifle in the world.

But before one factory wheel could turn—for the first model or the finished job—there had to be power—and most of it is electric. Electric power helped put your Garand in your hands, Johnny.

It takes a tremendous lot of power to make all the guns, tanks, planes and ships we need —but America has a lot. Power reserves, built up in advance by the business men who manage America’s electric companies, have been able to meet almost every defense demand overnight.

Requirements keep increasing, of course—and the electric companies are working day and night to keep ahead of the nation’s needs. In 1941, they built and installed almost 2,000,000 more horsepower in Democracy’s busy arsenal!

You have the hardest part of the job, Johnny, but we’re glad we can help by doing our share. We’re glad to pledge our wholehearted co-operation with you, the government, and other industries—to make America so strong it can remain forever free and unafraid.

This page is sponsored by 52 local electric companies—all producing power for America under American business management.*

YEAH, MA'AM! Bud's the best band leader in town since Sparton arrived! The gang wouldn't miss his Sparton Christmas party on a bet! Swing, jive and conga get new life with that famous Sparton tone, known everywhere as "Radio's Richest Voice."

Ask your exclusive Sparton dealer (only one in each community) to show you the Sparton radio-phonograph combinations. Ask him how he saves you money . . . when you buy the Sparton way.

MOSCOW HOLDS ON

by PHILIP JORDAN

Kuibishev (by cable)

Nowadays they do not always sound the alert when the great black bombers sail over Moscow. There is too much work to be done; there is so little time to do it.

Moscow has changed since the Government evacuated the diplomatic corps on Oct. 15 and a day later introduced the new form of "martial law" which means, in effect, that every living body inside the city is at the disposal of the Government. Moscow's people have accepted this new decree with equanimity. Naturally here and there people are to be found who are not prepared to play their part in defending the city—but they are a negligible minority. There was the case of two shopkeepers who tried to slip away into safer country. But they did not get far. The militia caught them and they were tried for what amounts to desertion. They were shot. There are few people in Moscow today who will quarrel with that verdict.

It may be fairly said that while Moscow's population is not cheering, they are confident. What has cemented them more than an outsider could perhaps imagine is the fact that Stalin did not leave with the diplomatic corps but stayed behind in the Kremlin to share with the others whatever is coming. Even though Stalin does not often appear in public, he is the symbol of everything in which they be-

How much Room-per-Dollar will your new car give you?

• You could pay far over the price of a Ford and get little if any more room than you get in the big, wide bodies of today's Ford cars. You can prove this, with a yardstick.

You could pay way up the scale and get little if any more riding ease than the new Ford ride gives Ford owners today. You can prove this, on any rough road.

In mechanical quality and lively performance, it is hard today as always to find better value than a Ford. Take the wheel and you can prove this.

In these unusual times, we offer you an unusual car in the dollar's-worth it gives in every way. And isn't dollar's-worth the best possible way to pick out your new car this year?

What are today's facts on roominess?

Inside the body, from windshield to rear window, the new Fordor sedan measures 107½ inches. Total seating width is 108¼—over nine feet! Here is big, generous riding-space for a family of six. You have seldom ridden in bigger cars; often in smaller!

How much comfort for your money?

So much more that you must actually ride in this new Ford to realize it! Springs are longer, softer-acting; chassis is lower, wider; new dual stabilizers add still more smoothness to the ride! We doubt if you will find as much improvement in ride anywhere else today!

What's the price of good performance?

When you pay for a Ford, you get top performance and low operating cost, too. The famous 90 hp V-8 is even further improved in responsiveness—and you can now choose either the V-8 or the new 90 hp Ford "6"—the most modern six-cylinder engine in America!

Now is the time when quality counts!

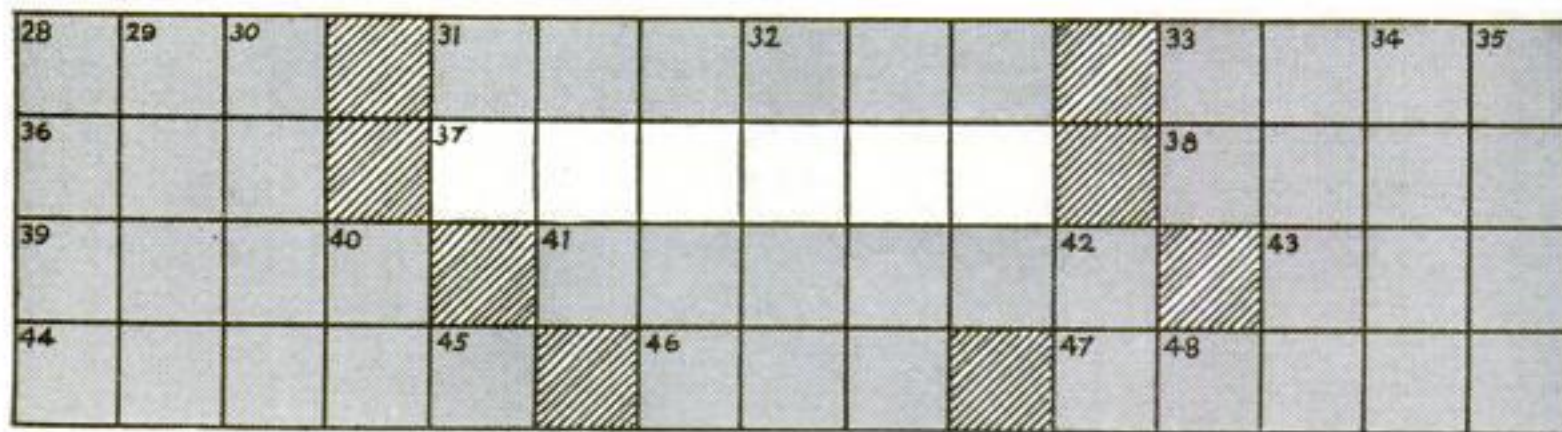

We are glad to say that defense requirements have been met without a single reduction in the goodness of the car mechanically. Some new materials have replaced old ones, usually at greater cost to us, but in every case the new is equal to or better than the old!

lieve. Had he left town it would have been as though a Roman general had removed the eagles from the thick of battle and sent them to some place where there was no danger. When he appeared in Red Square on the November 7th celebrations, when the Soviet Union entered its 25th and most perilous year, he received a spontaneous ovation such as he had never known before. One traveler from Moscow says that he felt the capital was more secure after that. His sense of Moscow's security was increased when he lunched in Moscow's safest building, the New Moscow Hotel on the big square just outside the Kremlin walls, with a friend who is a tank officer. This friend had been granted dawn-to-dusk leave and had motored in from active duty to get his hair cut and have a meal in comfortable surroundings. That is how close the front is to Moscow. You get in your car at battalion headquarters and say to your chauffeur: "New Moscow Hotel, Ivan," and off you go.

But even if you've only got dawn-to-dusk leave you can fulfill all your commissions in Moscow nowadays for the very good reason that queues have almost vanished. Not so long ago you had to wait perhaps as much as an hour inside a hairdresser's shop, but today there is plenty of service because so many people who normally used barber shops have gone away—either to the front or to the rear where new industries are being created and are being staffed by skilled workers brought from the Moscow region.

It is the same in the hotels. At about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, which is Russia's busiest lunch hour, there used to be people hanging about all hotel and restaurant lobbies. If you could get a meal within an hour you were lucky. Life in Moscow has speeded up to such an extent that there is even room to sit down in the trolley cars and trolley buses. Bread queues still exist but they are smaller. There are also occasional queues outside the cinemas on Saturday and Sunday afternoons. The biggest box-office hit in Moscow at the moment is the Soviet version of the British film London Can Take It, which is something of a busman's holiday for people who are now taking it themselves.

First prize for adaptability goes to the two members of the American Embassy who have stayed behind to look after American property. They live in solitary glory in Spasso House which normally is the private residence of the American Ambassador. Every evening they have a private subway car in the metro. As for bombing—well, exactly where the bombs have fallen is something that Russians are naturally not going to tell the world. But everyone who has seen Moscow since the air raids became intensified agrees that the city isn't much chipped. It really is true that most of the bombing has damaged what are called "cultural objects." Bombs have not interfered with the essential life of the city in any appreciable manner.

In the meantime, Moscow's war industry is leaving the capital on long files of flat cars that have priority over all other traffic. How much of this important industry has so far been shifted is naturally a military secret, but the world would be surprised if it knew with what controlled precision and efficiency the Government has sent eastward all the machine tools on which the Red Army relies to keep in fighting form. Along with these factories, turned suddenly into portable work shops, go all the skilled and unskilled workers who use them to turn raw materials into weapons of war.

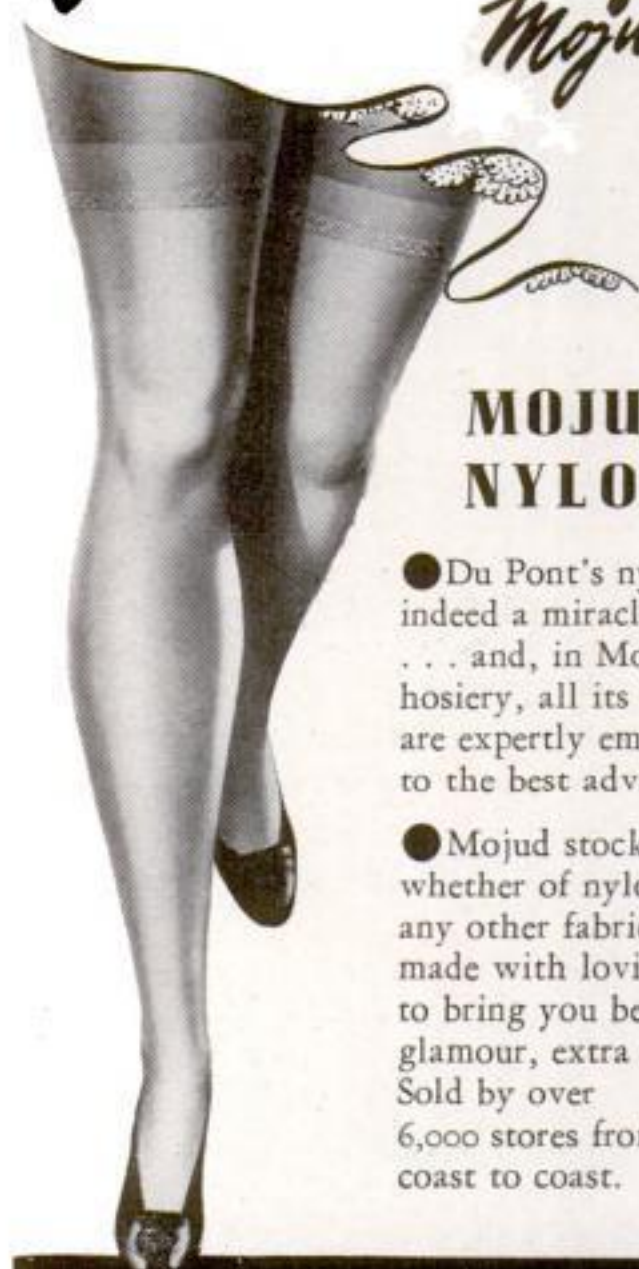

These shipments of tools and workers have priority over civilians with families and little else to do but rear them. Not that children are being neglected, but most of them went long ago so that they would be saved to carry on when they grow up and so that their schools might be used as hospitals. The transformation of schools into hospitals is not difficult as nearly all modern schools in Moscow were built with one eye to the "coming war" that has now come, and their architects, when drawing plans, remembered they might eventually have to be used as war hospitals. Which is why in some Moscow schools you find the kind of faucets that normally are found only in operating theaters—the kind you turn on either with elbows or feet.

LIFE'S PICTURES

William C. ShROUT Jr. is the energetic LIFE photographer who took the timely pictures of U. S. land and air defenses in Hawaii on pages 28-31. During his stay on the island of Oahu, ShROUT inspected the defenses from end to end, climbed volcanic peaks, flew from island to island in the local airline. He left the Hawaiian Islands much impressed with the high morale of the Army and Navy and with the tenseness of the island population.

The Pennsylvania Turnpike, winding its way through beautiful hill country, is perhaps America's most magnificent motor highway. And at convenient intervals, are the attractive, colonial Howard Johnson restaurants where tired motorists can stop for a bit of relaxation and hearty refreshment. The Midway Station (inset at left), like all the others, features condiments from the House of Heinz—Heinz Tomato Ketchup, of course, as well as Heinz Chili Sauce, "57" Beefsteak Sauce and Heinz Worcestershire. And, at the lunch counter, you'll also find the popular, convenient Heinz Soup service.

Sixteen years ago, a Yankee sea captain built a small roadside stand where he sold live lobsters. From this beginning developed The Oasis, Branford, Connecticut's nationally famous sea food restaurant. Now over 1200 guests a day partake of these succulent lobsters sautéed in butter...served, of course, with Heinz condiments. Note the Heinz Tomato Ketchup and Chili Sauce. Happy couple above are celebrating their wedding anniversary.

After-theatre crowds in the busy Times Square district often drop in for a midnight snack at Rosoff's. For head-man Rosoff believes that only the finest foods are good enough. Heinz condiments have been featured here for nearly thirty-five years.

Prominent visiting celebrities never miss a chance to drop in at Cincinnati's modern Parisian Side Walk Cafe in the Hotel Gibson. For here is food at its finest...made even better because it's served with Heinz Ketchup, Chili Sauce and other savory condiments.

WE received a postcard once bearing the simple address—57, U. S. A. And we naturally considered it quite a tribute to the universal acceptance of our products! Take Heinz Tomato Ketchup, for instance. This racy, saucy condiment has become the world's largest-selling ketchup, for it has a flavor that's never been successfully imitated! To capture this matchless, true-tomato taste, we use only pedigreed "aristocrat" tomatoes. Within a few hours of harvesting, these vine-ripened beauties are bubbling in our kettles—mingling their mellow goodness with the tang of Heinz Vintage Vinegar and the spicy zest of exquisite seasonings. You'll find ruddy, old-fashioned Heinz Tomato Ketchup at your favorite restaurant—and on the pantry shelves of clever cooks! The famous octagonal bottle is a sign of good eating all 'round the globe!

Established on the spot where Roger Conant and followers landed in 1626, Stromburg's Restaurant at Stromburg's Landing in Salem Harbor, Mass., serves over one thousand pounds of fresh sea food per day. And many of their delicious dishes are further enhanced with Heinz Tomato Ketchup.

JAPAN LAUNCHES RECKLESS ATTACK ON U. S.

IN DESPERATE GAMBLE ON VICTORY OR SUICIDE IT STRIKES FIRST BLOW AT HAWAII

Out of the Pacific skies last week World War II came with startling suddenness to America. It was 7:35 a. m. on a Sunday morning—the aggressors' favorite day—when two Japanese planes, wearing on their wings the Rising Sun of Japan, flew out of the western sky over the Hawaiian island of Oahu. Japan had seized the initiative and was making the most of the aggressor's privilege to strike the first blow. With reckless daring Japan aimed this blow at the citadel of American power in the Pacific, the great naval fortress of Pearl Harbor.

Close observers of Japan have said for years that if that country ever found itself in a hopeless corner it was capable of committing national hara-kiri by flinging itself at the throat of its mightiest enemy. Japan has found itself in just such a corner. It could not retreat without losing all and it could not advance another step without war. It took the desperate plunge and told its enemies in effect: "If this be hara-kiri, make the most of it."

Japan's daring was matched only by its barefaced duplicity. There was no warning—not even such an ultimatum as Hitler is wont to send while his legions pour across some new border. At the very moment the first bombs fell on Pearl Harbor Japan's two envoys in Washington were in Secretary Hull's office at the State Department, making their blandest protestations of peaceful intent. Ambassador Nomura and Envoy Kuruusu had come with the answer to Hull's note. He read it through and then, for the first time in many long, patient years, the soft-spoken Secretary lost his temper. Into the teeth of the two

Japanese, who for once did not grin, he flung these words: "In all my 50 years of public service I have never seen a document that was more crowded with infamous falsehoods and distortions—on a scale so huge that I never imagined until today that any government on this planet was capable of uttering them."

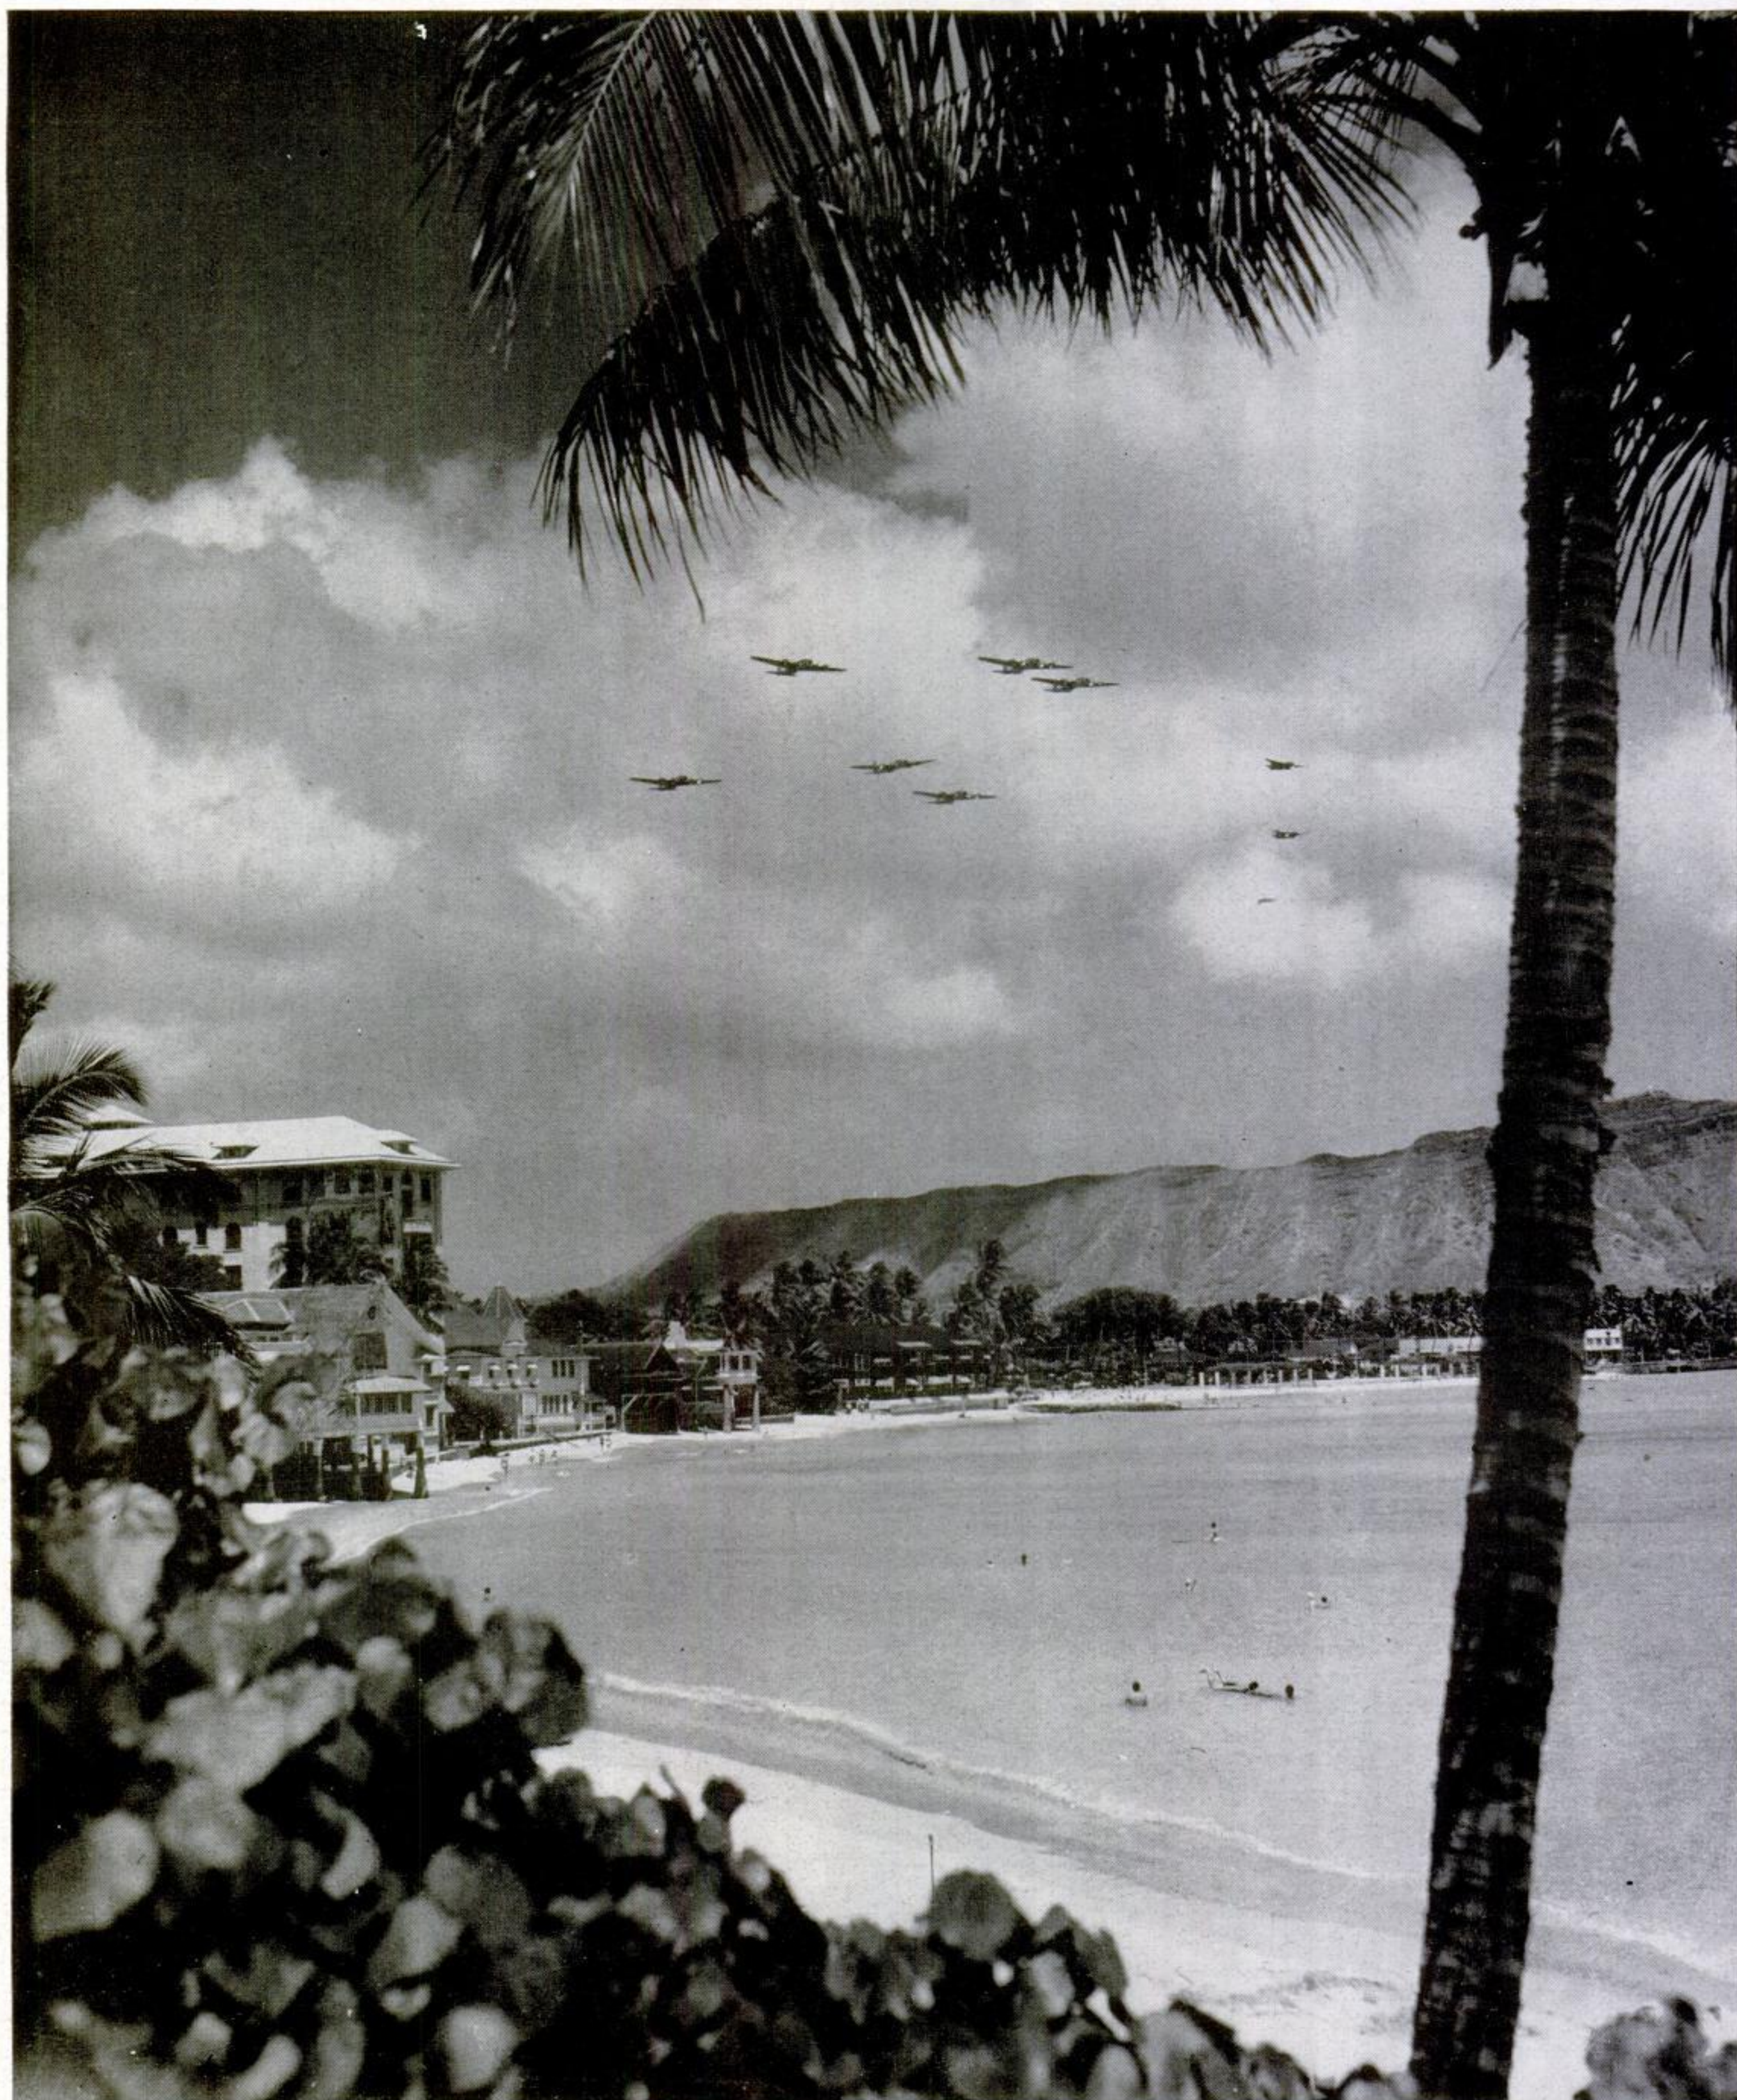

NOMURA AND KURUSU BEFORE CONFERENCE WITH HULL

The two Japanese scurried out of his office and home to their Embassy.

Even as Hull spoke, America sprang to arms. Wherever it was in the wide ocean, the U. S. Fleet went into action and all over the Pacific U. S. garrisons stood ready. In Washington President Roosevelt dictated his war message to Congress. From Army and Navy headquarters the prearranged orders went out which transformed the U. S. into a nation at war. In the face of an attack so clear that no man could argue it, the nation stood absolutely united. Senator Wheeler, the leader of Isolationists, spoke for all when he said: "The only thing now is to do our best to lick hell out of them."

How much or how long it would take to lick Japan, no man could say. The U. S. Navy has always been supremely confident of its ability to sink the Japanese Fleet in open battle or, if the enemy ships refused battle, to strangle the island empire by blockade. In recent months the vulnerable Philippine station has been strengthened by the addition of squadrons of heavy bombers. With new British warships at Singapore, plus the combined land-air strength of the British, Dutch and Australian forces, America has a long-range superiority over Japan. It may be, indeed, that America's greatest danger is overconfidence. There will surely be more naval losses and more strong attacks on American islands because Japan has a strategic and tactical advantage at the outset of this Pacific war. It will take not only all-out U. S. military might but great persistence and great courage to hurl back attack and to win the final victory.

JAP BOMBERS AIM FIRST BLOW AT OAHU BASE

West of Waikiki Beach, fashionable playground for this Pacific Paradise, Japan's first attacking bombers swept without warning from the western Pacific. Raining death upon Oahu Island, they struck their fiercest blows at two major targets: the Navy's Pearl Harbor and the Army's Hickam Field, where great bombers have their base. The first wave came over at 7:35 a. m. Some soared in at enormous altitudes. Escaping, they dipped low, avoiding the fortification of Diamond Head, whose main promontory rises from the cliffs in background, to the right.

↑ U. S. aircraft rose at once to repel the Japanese attack. Excited civilians saw the sky darken with American fighters engaging Jap squadrons; and with Flying Fortress formations, like the one above, heading out to sea. One Jap carrier was reported sunk.

Hickam Field, the Army's Oahu bomber base, and one of the world's biggest military airdromes, felt the full fury of Japanese attack. An entire section of barracks was destroyed by direct hits. At least 100 U. S. soldiers were killed, hundreds more wounded.

GREAT PEARL HARBOR NAVAL BASE IS CENTER

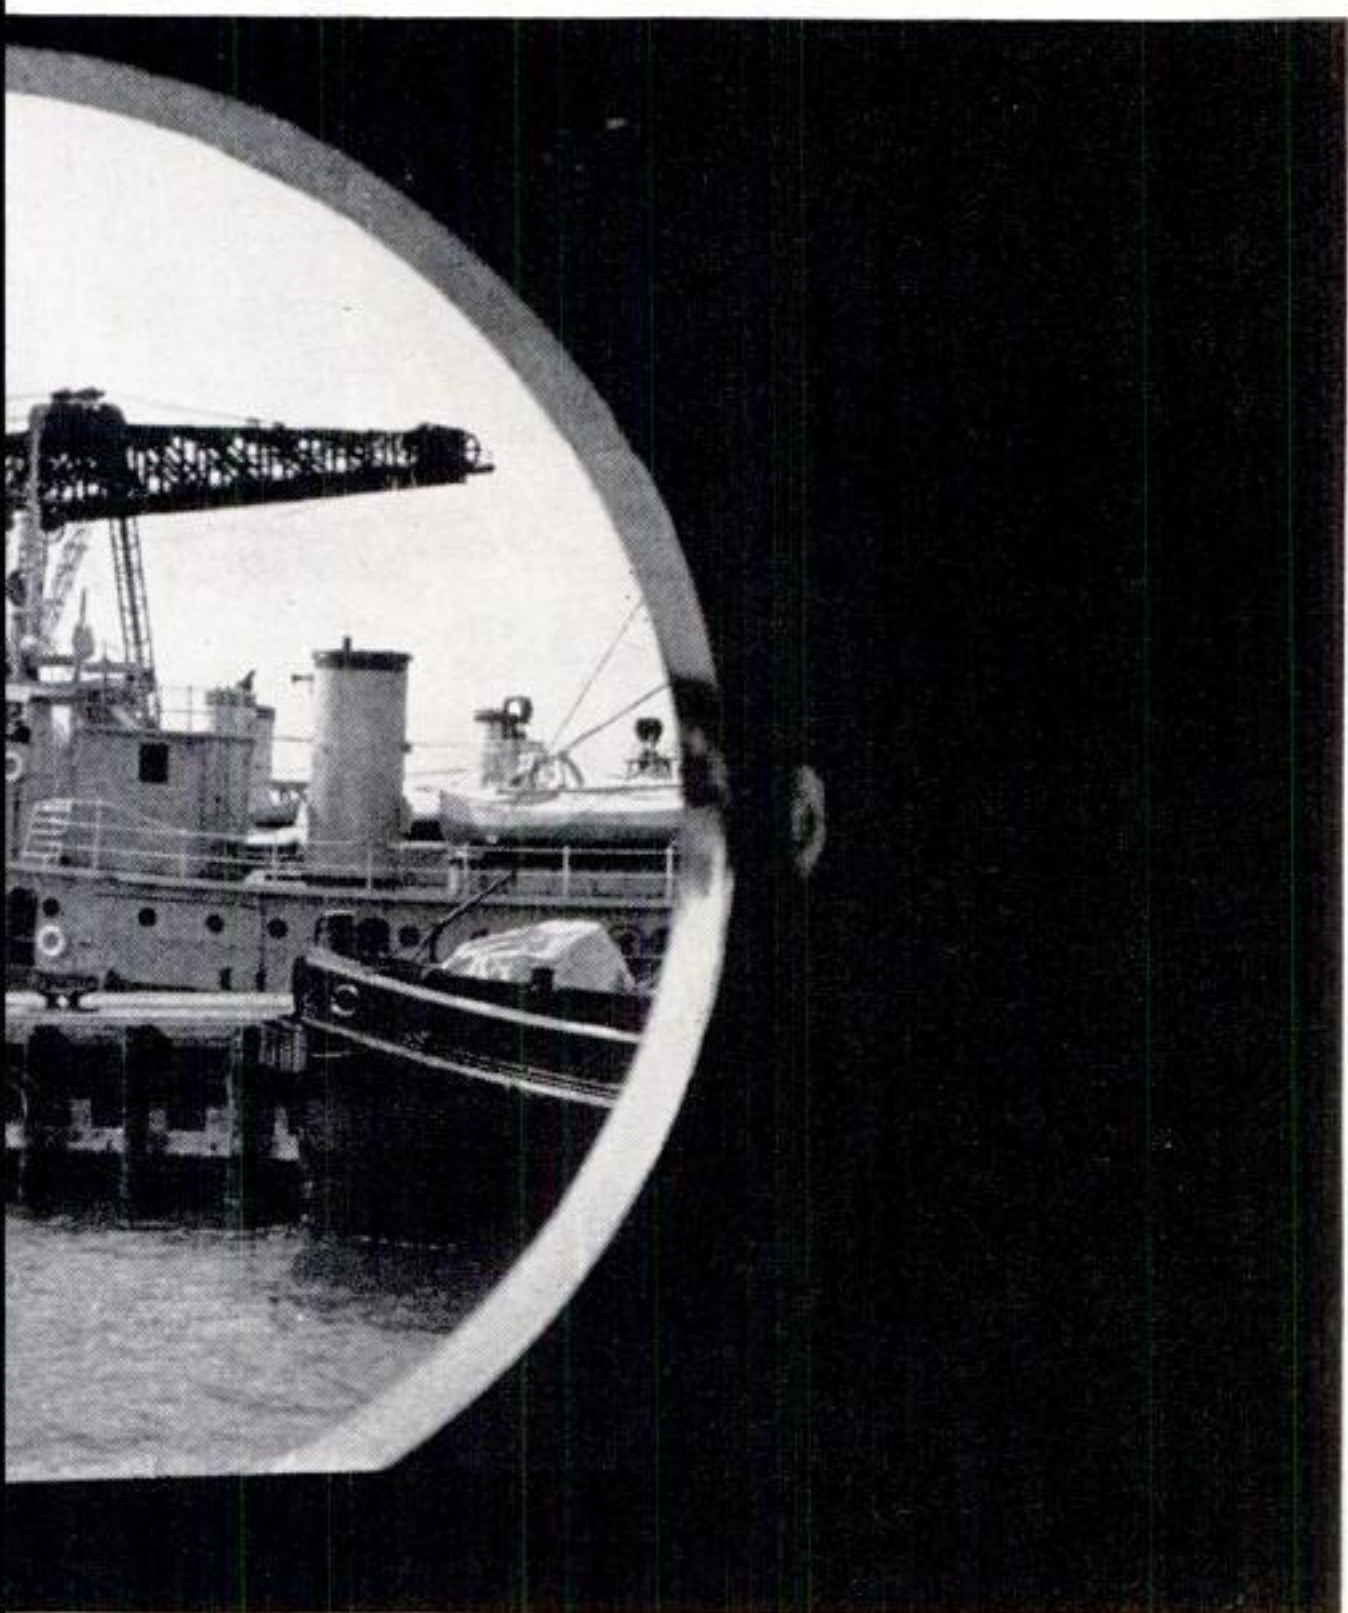

Marine guards in raised towers like this (left) are stationed around the entire outer rim of the $100,000,000 Pearl Harbor base, above a high steel fence. Yet somehow Japanese bombers managed to slip past American guards and aerial patrols and deliver their surprise blows at this heart of U. S. defenses in the Pacific. Above: Jap-eye view (through a porthole) shows one of the giant cranes at the repair base, which is capable of raising a whole destroyer or submarine.

U. S. warships lie at Pearl Harbor repair docks (above). Here whole U. S. Fleet can be berthed, repaired, provisioned and refitted. In their surprise attack the Japanese sought to cripple the U. S. Fleet in the Pacific by crippling its most important base. Right: This safe at Fort Kamehameha holds secret plans for defense of the base—plans the Japs got the jump on. Fort Kamehameha and Fort Weaver defend actual entrance to Pearl Harbor and Army and Navy air stations.

THE U. S. FLEET TAKES FIRST PUNISHMENT

Commander of the Pacific Fleet and Commander in Chief of U. S. Naval Forces, Admiral Husband Edward ("Hubby") Kimmel (left), was caught short at Pearl Harbor. He commands a Fleet of at least nine battleships, less those knocked out by Japs. At right is his Chief of Staff, Captain William B. Smith. Son of an Army major and son-in-law of an admiral, Admiral Kimmel had not been given enough patrol planes to spot enemy carriers a night's steaming away.

Reported hit and sunk in the mousetrap anchorage of Pearl Harbor was the battleship West Virginia, one of the latest battleships built (1921) until 1941 class. It had been refitted last year with pom-pom guns, was well above the standard of the Admiral's flagship, Pennsylvania. The 31,800-ton West Virginia carried armor up to 18 inches thick, eight 16-in. guns, a crew of 1,500. Like other U. S. battleships, it was slower but mightier than Jap battleships.

Reported hit and burning in Pearl Harbor was the older battleship Oklahoma (1914). It is called the first of the "all or nothing" class in armor protection, that is, putting it on heavy or not at all. The Oklahoma carries ten 14-in. guns and a crew of about 1,300. Admiral Kimmel's problem now is to avoid a battle with the full Japanese battle line of twelve battleships until he gets reinforcements from the Atlantic. Before the Jap attack the U. S. had 14 modern battleships and three old slow ones. "Our Navy is the best," Admiral Kimmel says, "and it will remain the best." Its job until it gets reunited is to escort merchantmen along the West Coast and across the South Pacific. Not until it assembles superior force can it begin reducing the Jap advance bases in the Mariana and Caroline islands, regaining losses. A tiny loss last week was the capture at Shanghai of the U. S. river gunboat, Wake.

JAPS SNEAK IN CLOSE FOR HAWAIIAN ATTACK

The Japanese Fleet, here photographed in mass for the last time on the 2,600th "birthday" of Japan, Oct. 11, 1940, reveals aircraft carriers (rear), battleship and battle cruisers. Japanese Admiral Isoroku Yamamoto's Fleet includes probably twelve battleships, thus being numerically the same as the remaining modern U. S. battleships, if two have been put out of action. Their names are Nissin, Takamatu (both new 40,000-tonners), Nagato, Mutu, Ise, Hyuga, Huso, Yamasiro, Kongo, Hiei, Haruna, Kirisima (all more than 20 years old). The names refer to Japanese provinces and mountains. Japan's supreme and perhaps last chance would be to try to catch the diminished U. S. Fleet, while it is inferior in the Pacific. Japan's surprise attack suggested that it had some such plan. For the submarine that torpedoed a U. S. transport east of the Hawaiian Islands must have set out on its mission two weeks before.

The Jap attackers were aircraft carriers, presumably three, in order to launch 150 bombers at Hawaii. For the nine Jap carriers carry less than 50 planes apiece, as against an average of 80 planes on the seven U. S. carriers. The carriers that sneaked within 300 miles of Hawaii under the cover of night and sent off their planes to the attack at dawn on Sunday, Dec. 7, were probably loaded with torpedo, dive and high-level bombers, very few fighters. At least one carrier was caught and sunk by the U. S. Navy, according to reports, before it could get away. The Japanese carriers bear such names as Crane, Lucky Stork, Flying Dragon, Shining Dragon, Blue Dragon, and names for Japanese mountains. The carrier shown in the picture above is the Kaga, transformed from a battleship, and may well have been one of those that made the attack. The skill of its crew is far surpassed by U. S. carrier technique.

THE FRENCH SOLDIER WHO SIGNED THE ARMISTICE MEETS DEATH IN PLANE

General Charles Leon Clement Huntziger, 61, had done the best he could for France. His parents came from the secessionist borders of France—Alsace and Brittany. A ramrod-backed little man, he was put on the Supreme War Council by the Popular Front Government of Daladier in the Munich year of 1938. He fought his heart out in May-June 1940 to stop the Germans at the Meuse and Somme. Because of his little-man's dignity, he was chosen by Marshal Pétain to sign the humiliating armistice agreements with Germany and Italy. Pétain made him War Minister and commander in chief of the diminished French land forces. Entirely loyal to Pétain, he flew to North Africa on Oct. 21 to see whether Marshal Weygand was loyal to Pétain too. On the way home Nov. 12 in a plane with the motto, "More is in us," he ran into a storm. After sending a message, "We are above Sainte Enimie," the ice-caked plane hit a mountain in the fog and burned its seven passengers to death. But just before it hit Huntziger had thrown out his brief case with his report. For this brave and futile life, France put on the best funeral it knew how (below). A week later, Weygand was relieved of his North African command.

DEATH COMES TO CHILE'S POPULAR FRONT PRESIDENT PEDRO AGUIRRE CERDA

An indomitable friend of man was the tough little President of Chile, Pedro Aguirre Cerda, 62, called Don Tinto for vineyards that made his fortune. The same tide of Popular Front politics that raised General Huntziger in 1938 made Aguirre President of Chile by only 2,111 votes the month after Munich. Born in the shadow of the Andes, he had fought all his life for the farmers of Chile, had admired U. S. President Roosevelt and the American New Deal. "To govern is to educate," he said.

But vast tragedy kept balking Don Tinto's social program. First it was an earthquake a month after he took office. Then it was military revolt. Then it was this World War, when social reforms go by the board. Finally, an old case of bronchial and lung congestion came back to plague him. On Nov. 10, he turned over the Presidency to Vice President Gerónimo Méndez. On Nov. 25 he died.

All Chile, Rightist and Leftist, grieved. Three days of mourning and a 15-day suspension of public functions were declared. Some 200,000 Chileans passed his bier in the Hall of Honor of the National Congress (below) where he had addressed both houses once a year. An election of his successor will occur Feb. 2.

U. S. HEAVY TANK

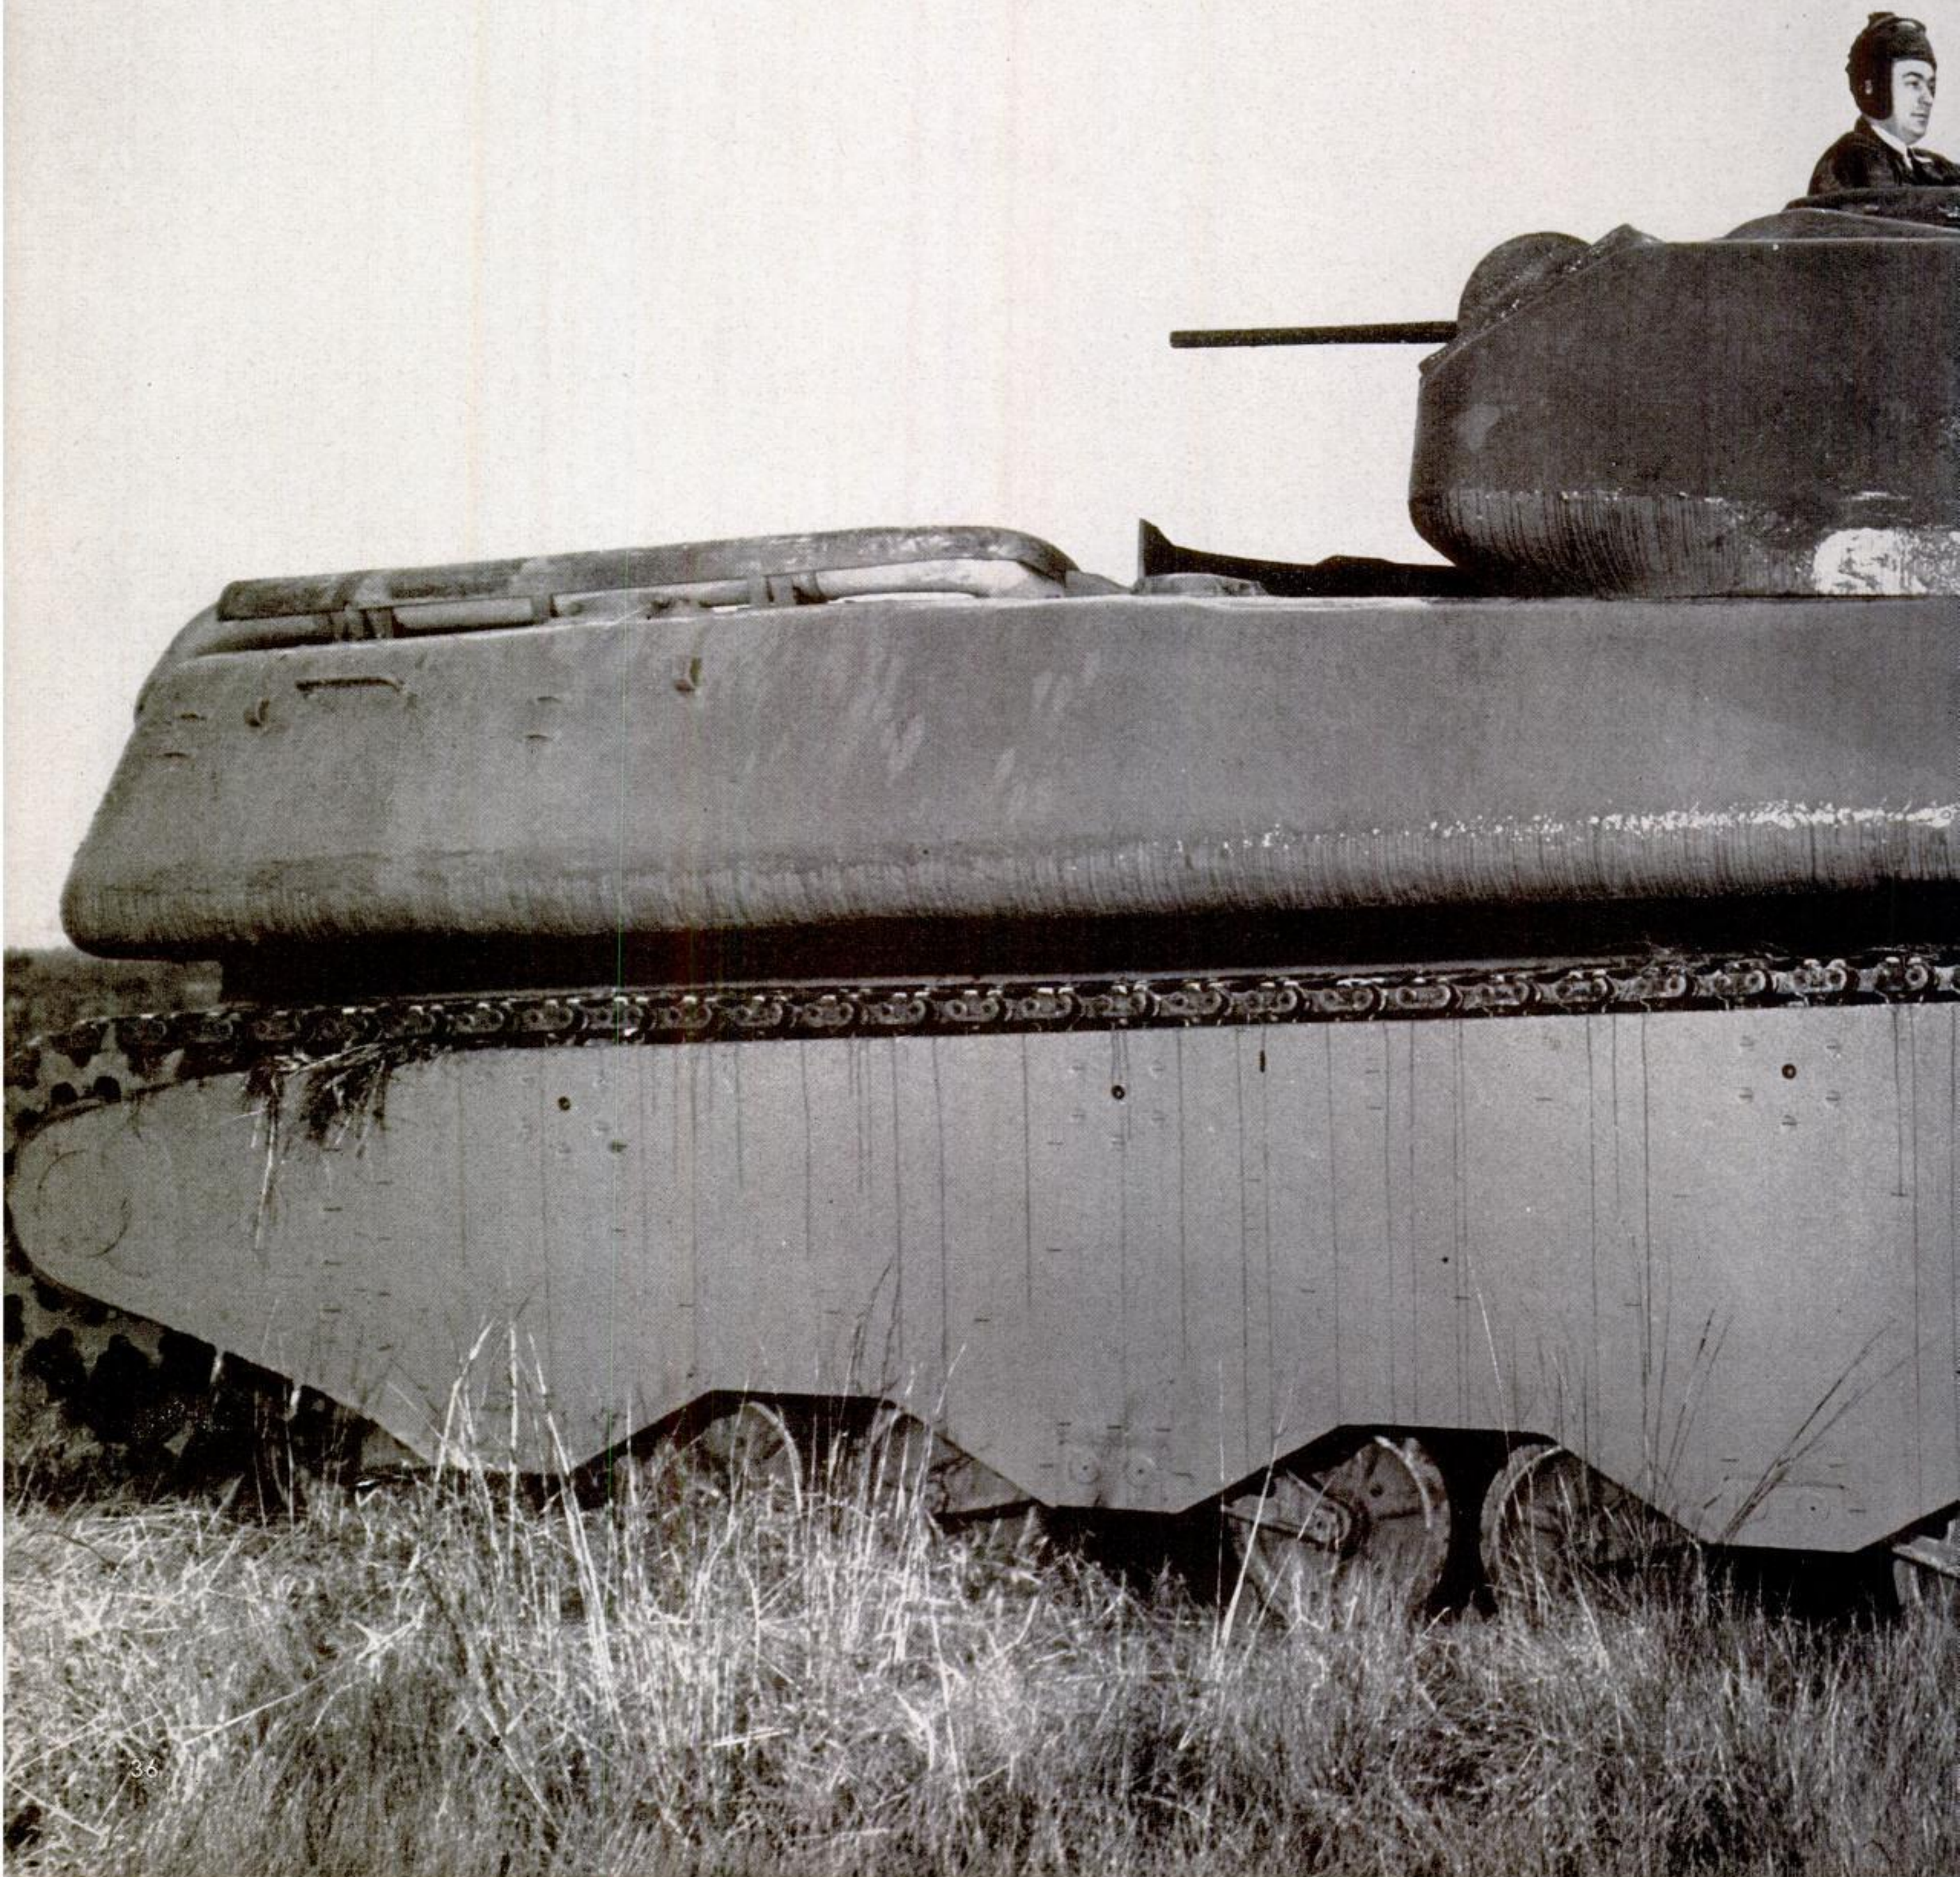

THE ARMY PROUDLY EXHIBITS ITS
MIGHTY 57-TON LAND BATTLESHIP

This week at the Baldwin Locomotive works in Eddystone, Pa. the U. S. public got its first look at the Army's newest possession—its 57-ton heavy tank. In the test model below the Army thinks that at last it has found a weapon to beat the armies of Hitler. Certainly it is the best tank in the world.

It looks and works like a land battleship, but it has the maneuverability of a destroyer. With a speed sufficient to chase medium tanks (which go about 30 m. p. h.) and tremendous firepower, provided principally by a high-velocity 3-in. gun, it should be faster and more accurate than even the famous German heavy 90-ton tank. It has a power-operated turret and instead of riveted armor, which is dangerous in battle because of the tendency of rivets, when hit, to shake loose and fly about inside a tank, it has armor castings. Over the suspension and tracks, always vulnerable to lucky hits, it has heavy armor plates. Furthermore, instead of the tiny peek holes for gunners and drivers, used on U. S. medium and light tanks, it has an indirect-vision system which works like the periscope of a submarine.

Said Secretary of War Stimson: "We are getting into the full production we have been planning ever since France fell." The test model of a heavy tank was a sound indication that what Stimson said was true. But there were also other defense developments which substantiated him. Since June airplane production had jumped from 1,476 planes a month to over 2,000 a month. In the first eleven months of 1941 the Navy had commissioned 27 combatant ships, launched 41 more, laid the keels for 128 more. Destroyers, submarines and battleships were being completed months ahead of schedule. Merchant ships were being launched at the rate of one a day.

Nor was that all. Already there were ten new powder and shell plants in operation. Light tanks were rolling out at more than ten a day, mediums at a slightly smaller figure. By summer, experts thought there would be 2,000 new tanks a month.

Even to a nation poised as close to war as the U. S., these facts were encouraging. But they were not good enough to make the country complacent. A lot had been done but much more had yet to be done. There were still bottlenecks. The Army did not have enough ammunition. Shortages in anti-aircraft and anti-tank guns and in field artillery remained acute. There should have been many more transmissions for tanks. Furthermore, with a high percentage of all war matériel going to England, Russia and China, the basic needs of the Army and Navy were still far from being met.

Fortunately the country was not complacent. It was convinced that it would have to produce even more to beat Adolf Hitler. Shaping up to take the place of the present huge all-out $68,000,000,000 defense effort was an even more colossal $120,000,000,000 "Victory" program. Under it the U. S. would spend $40,000,000,000 on defense next year, and another $60,000,000,000 in the year 1943. By 1944, the nation would have built more than 100,000 planes and 65,000 tanks, probably including plenty of the giants shown here.

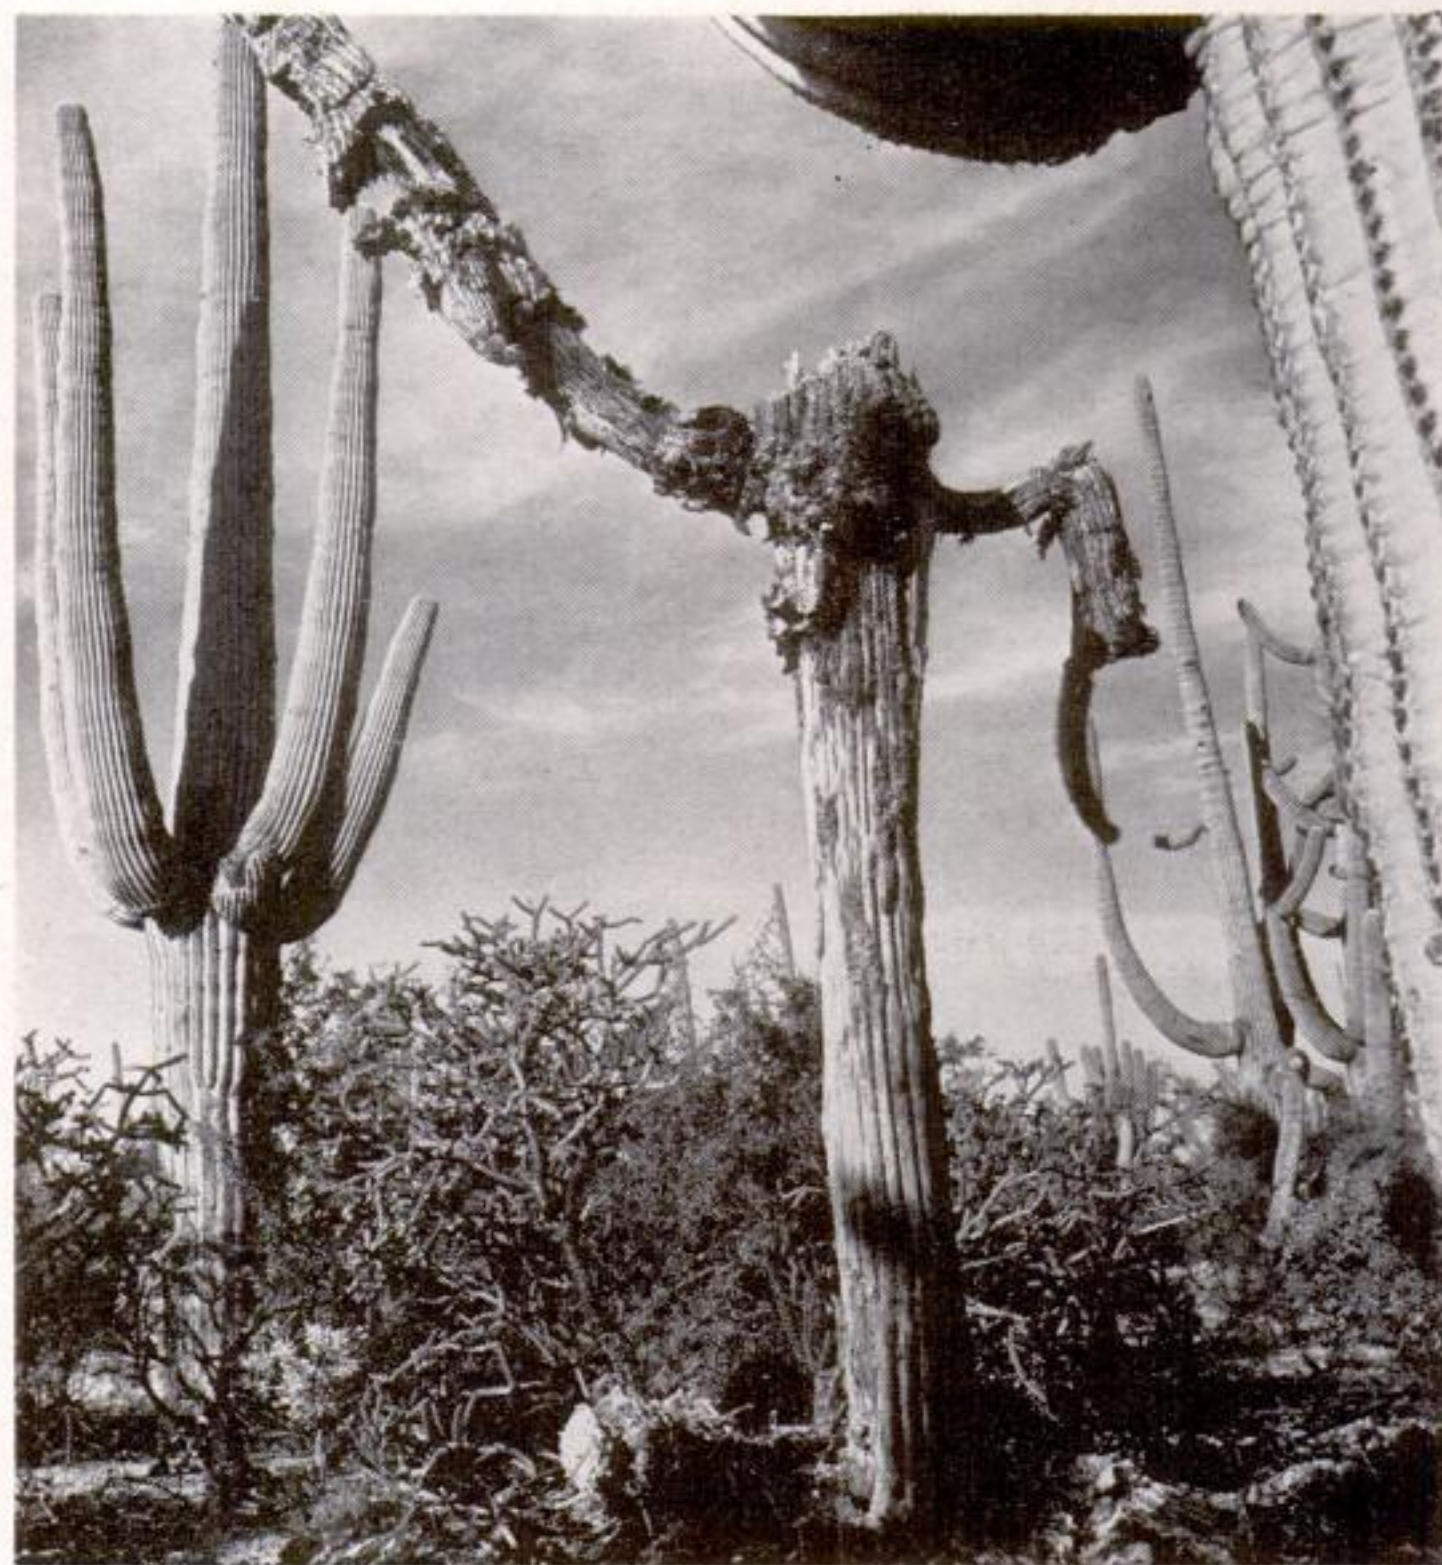

A suspicious sore is probed by a Department of Agriculture expert. In prodromal stages, cactus cancers are extremely difficult to diagnose. But once rampant, their progress is disastrously swift. Many a diseased giant dies within a fortnight after its rot pockets first begin to bleed.

A doomed saguaro is uprooted. Though externally sound, the meat within its spiny sepulcher is an abscess of pulpy putrefaction. Below: Because saguaro trees will not burn, condemned cactus is sheared into segments, sprinkled with a germicidal compound, dumped in a sandy grave.

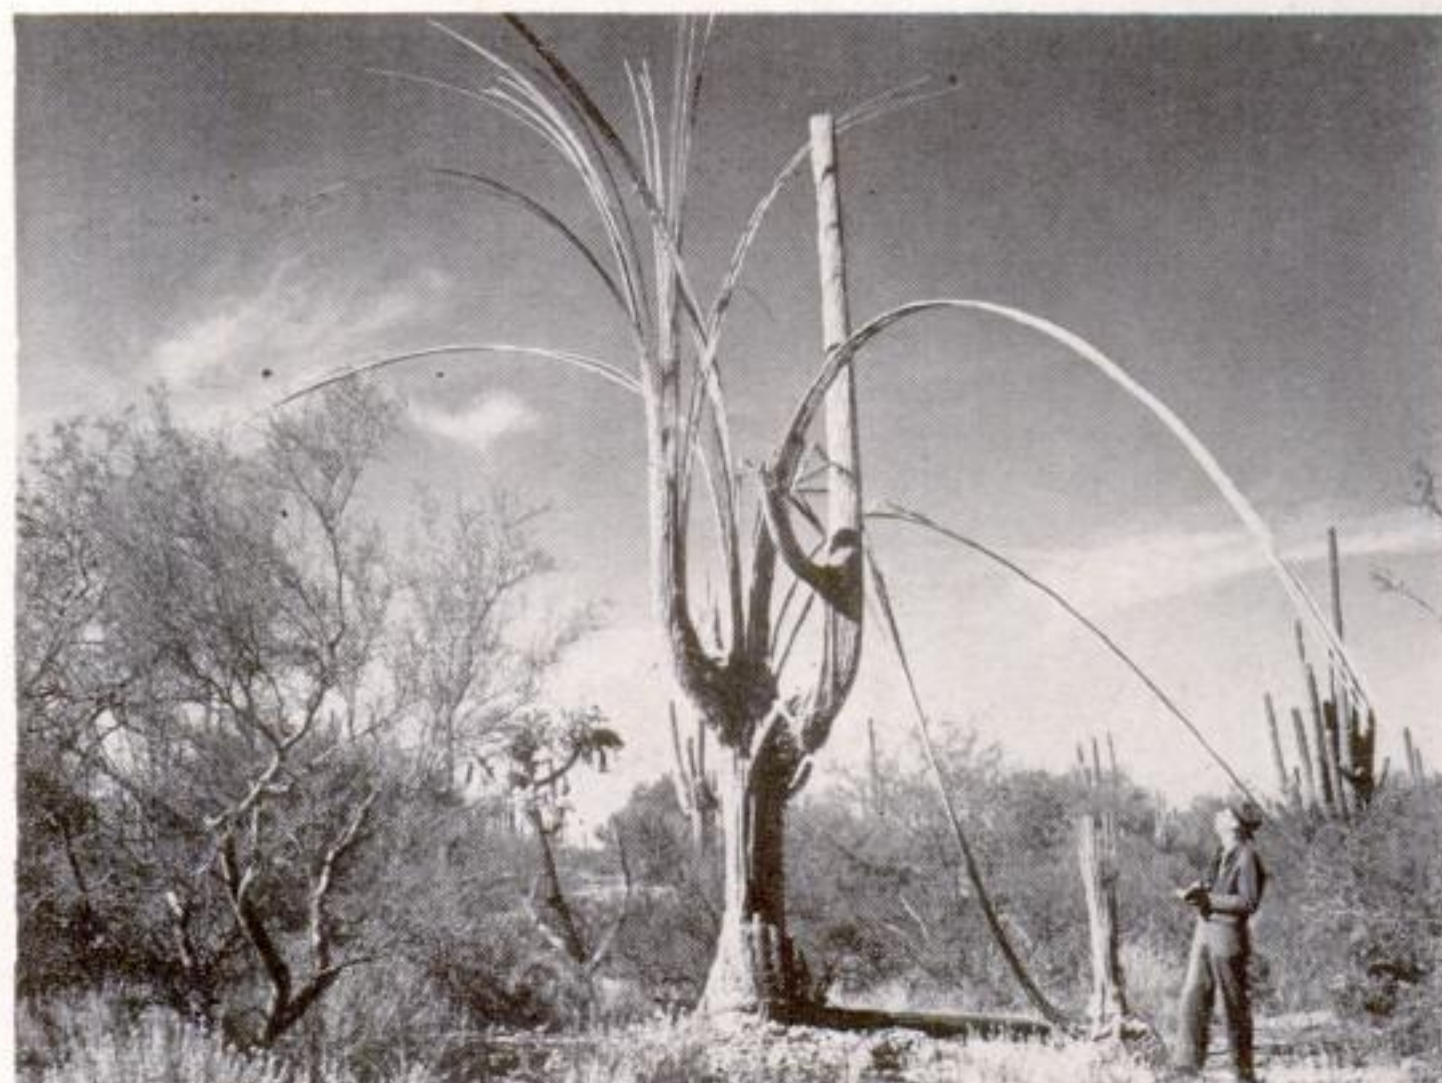

A DYING GIANT REARS ITS POKED AND ROTTING ARMS TOWARD THE ARIZONA SKY

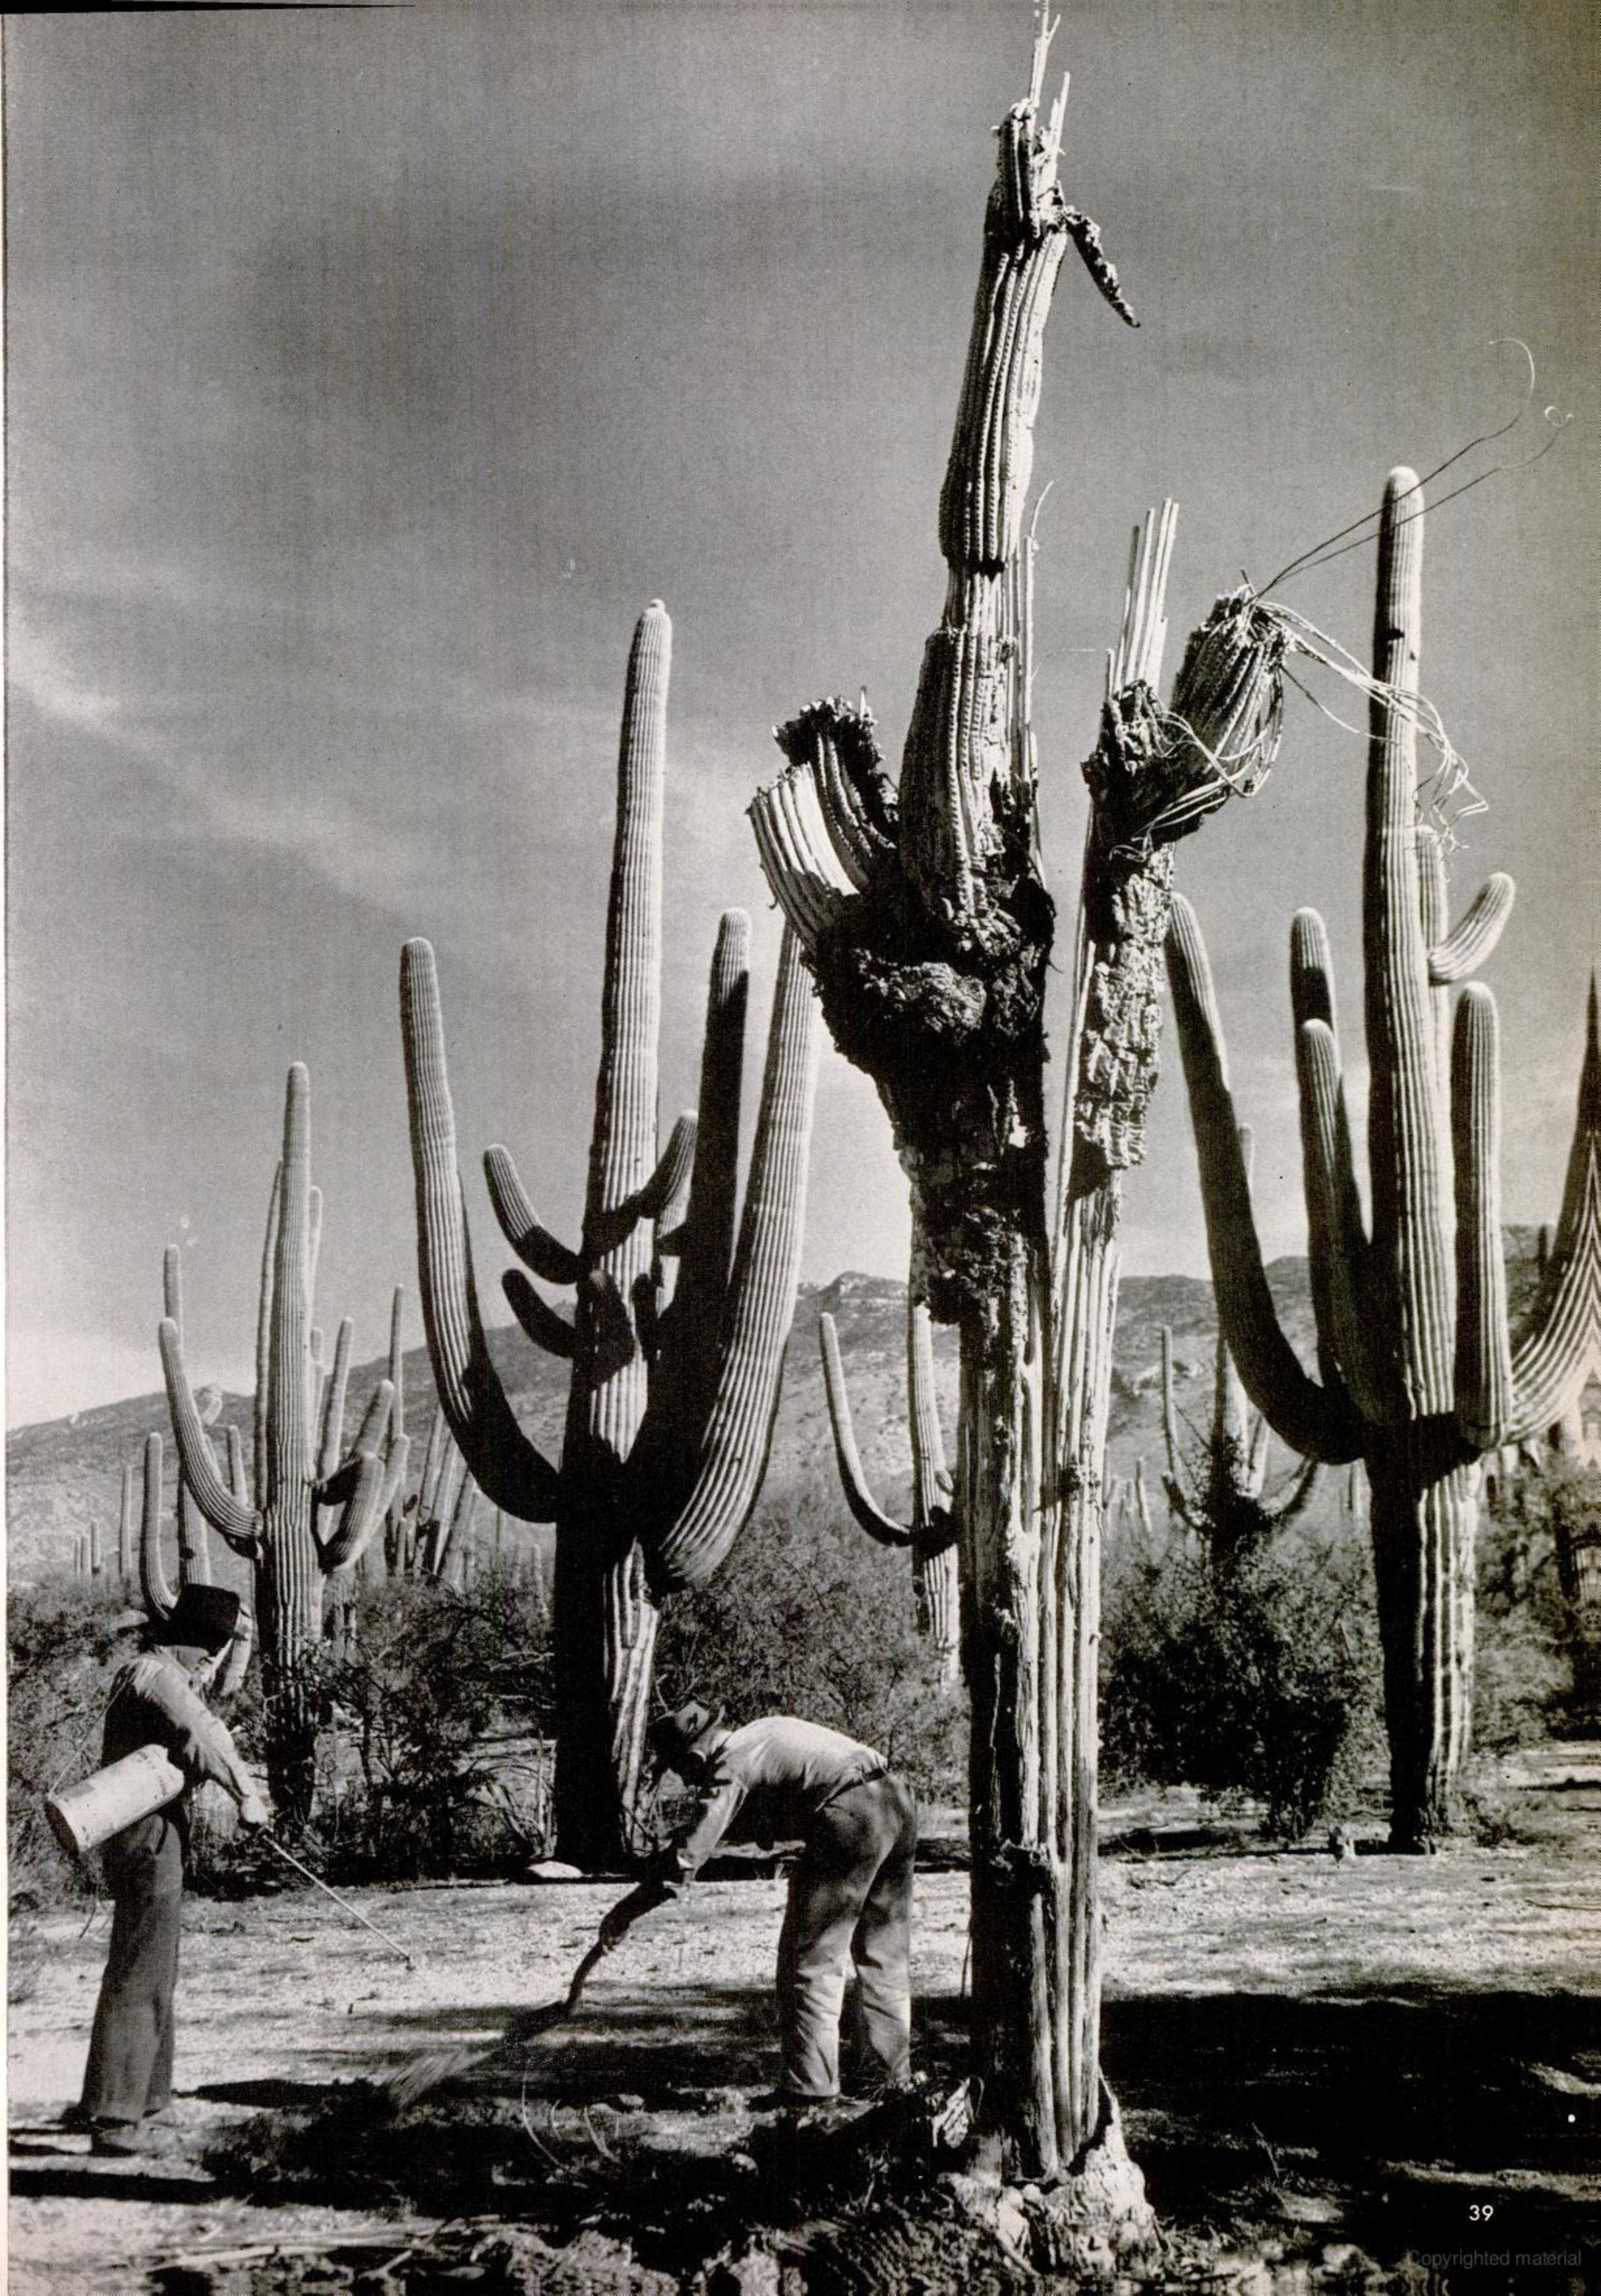

GOVERNMENT WAGES WAR ON MYSTERIOUS GERM KILLING ARIZONA'S GIANT CACTUS

In the far sandy Southwest last week, the U. S. was locked in combat with microscopic rod-shaped bacteria that had abruptly begun to devastate the treasured cactus forests of Arizona. For years plant pathologists had known that Carnegiea gigantea—the giant saguaro—intermittently fell ill and died. But in 1940 the disease acquired new malignancy. It slew giants by the score. Its progress was speedy, its symptoms subtle and diverse. Sometimes sick giants bled to death through running wounds. Sometimes they developed rot pockets which enlarged with cancerous acceleration. Sometimes they simply toppled, full-blown, their roots consumed by unseen corruption.

Now the Department of Agriculture and the University of Arizona have united to halt the epidemic. Cacti pocked with small rot wounds are receiving surgical treatment. Hopelessly diseased trees are uprooted, dissected and buried. The picture on opposite page shows pathologists disinfecting the ground where a sick saguaro has been excised. The giant in the foreground is also badly blighted and doomed to die.

The ghost of a giant saguaro, its flesh consumed by the deadly carnegieana bacteria, flaps dryly in the dry desert wind. A U. S. plant pathologist proscribes it for excision and burial.

AT A HANGAR PARTY AT THE ARMY'S SHERWOOD FIELD NEAR PASO ROBLES, CALIF., CORPORAL ROBERT ROBINSON WHISPERS A SECRET TO HIS BEST GIRL, PRETTY VIRGINIA TREECE

SOLDIERS SAY FAREWELL TO GIRLS AS CHRISTMAS LEAVES ARE CANCELED

A soldier's world is a lonely, uncertain world. It is a world of men, of work, of scrubby little towns far away from home. It is a world where sweetness and beauty live only in the memory of what has been and what may be again tomorrow.

When this picture was taken, this soldier was talking to his best girl. He was not saying much. Yet for one brief moment, before the girl went away, he was no longer a corporal in the U. S. Army. He was a boy in love, subject to nobody's orders, free to say what he wanted, dream what he wanted. And what he dreamed of principally was his Christmas furlough, when with some 600,000 other soldiers he would leave the Army camps to spend two weeks at home with his family and best girl.

But now with the nation at war, most Christmas furloughs will be drastically cut or canceled altogether, and this farewell scene takes on a deeper significance. It is something this happy boy and girl, thinking only of each other, may remember as long as they live.

“What, Sahib! Still shopping?”

MAN: Eh? Oh! Now look, camel, I don't wish to be uncivil on Christmas Eve . . . but go away, will you?

CAMEL: Christmas present trouble, Little Brother?

MAN: You might call it that. Add Aunt Agatha, Little Jimmie, and all the rest of the relatives—this Xmas has cost me a fortune. And I still have to take care of some of the boys at the office!

CAMEL: But sahib, you're looking right at one of the most delightful of Christmas presents—a truly noble whiskey, master—Paul Jones. A whiskey of superb flavor and great dryness!

MAN: I can't afford . . . what's that? Dryness, camel? What's dryness got to do with whiskey?

CAMEL: Much, O Son of the Morning. For it is this dryness . . . or lack of sweetness, which permits the full, rare flavor of Paul Jones to come through . . . clear and undistorted for your enjoyment. Indeed, master, it is dryness which makes Paul Jones so rare and lustrous a jewel among whiskeys.

MAN: Ah. And a jewel of pretty great price, I dare say.

CAMEL: Nay, O Gracious Prince. This Dry Paul Jones is sold for so modest a sum that connoisseurs of whiskey know it as a great buy. So great a buy, sahib, that the demand for Dry Paul Jones multiplied fivefold in less than two years. It—

MAN: Say no more, my fuzzy friend. Just tell me one thing: What are you doing December 25th?

CAMEL: Why, Effendi?

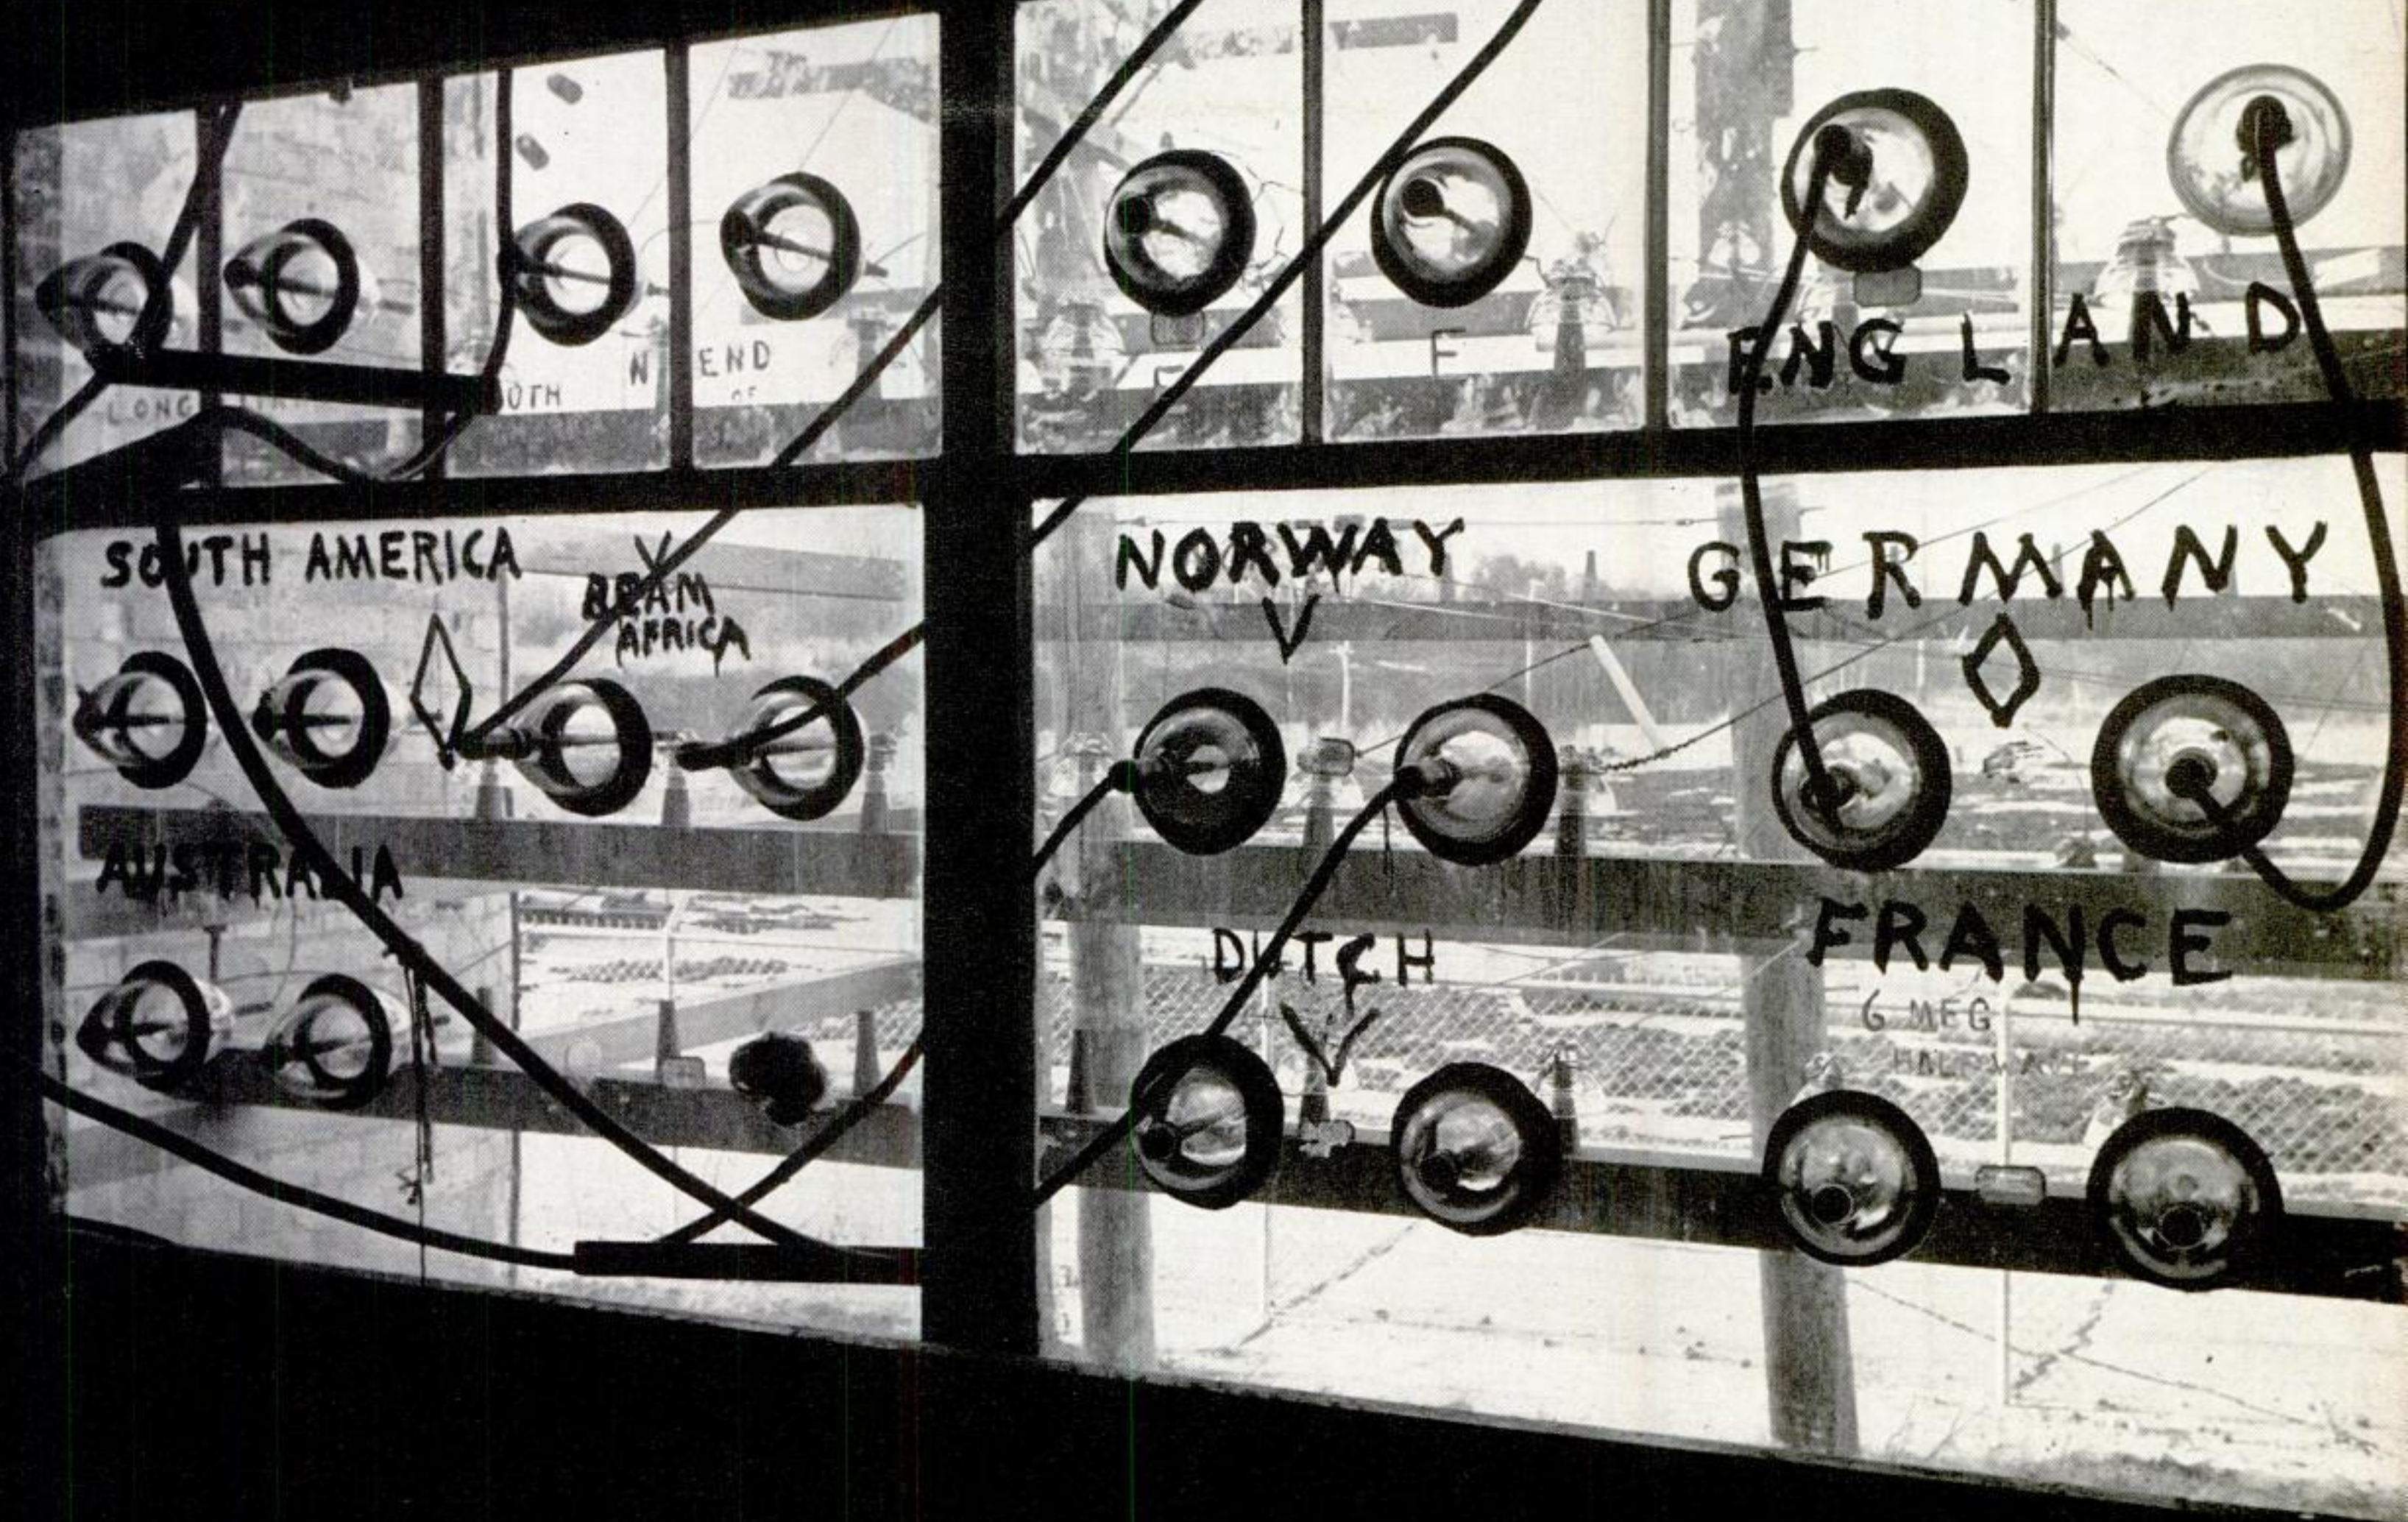

MAN: Because, my wonderful beast, I want to invite you out for the biggest, best, most marvelous Christmas dinner you ever had in your life!

THROUGH THIS GLASS PANEL BOARD, THE WIRES FROM WRUL'S 50,000-WATT TRANSMITTER PASS TO THE ANTENNAE THAT AIM ITS PROPAGANDA AT NATIONS AND CONTINENTS

PROPAGANDA FROM THE U. S. A.

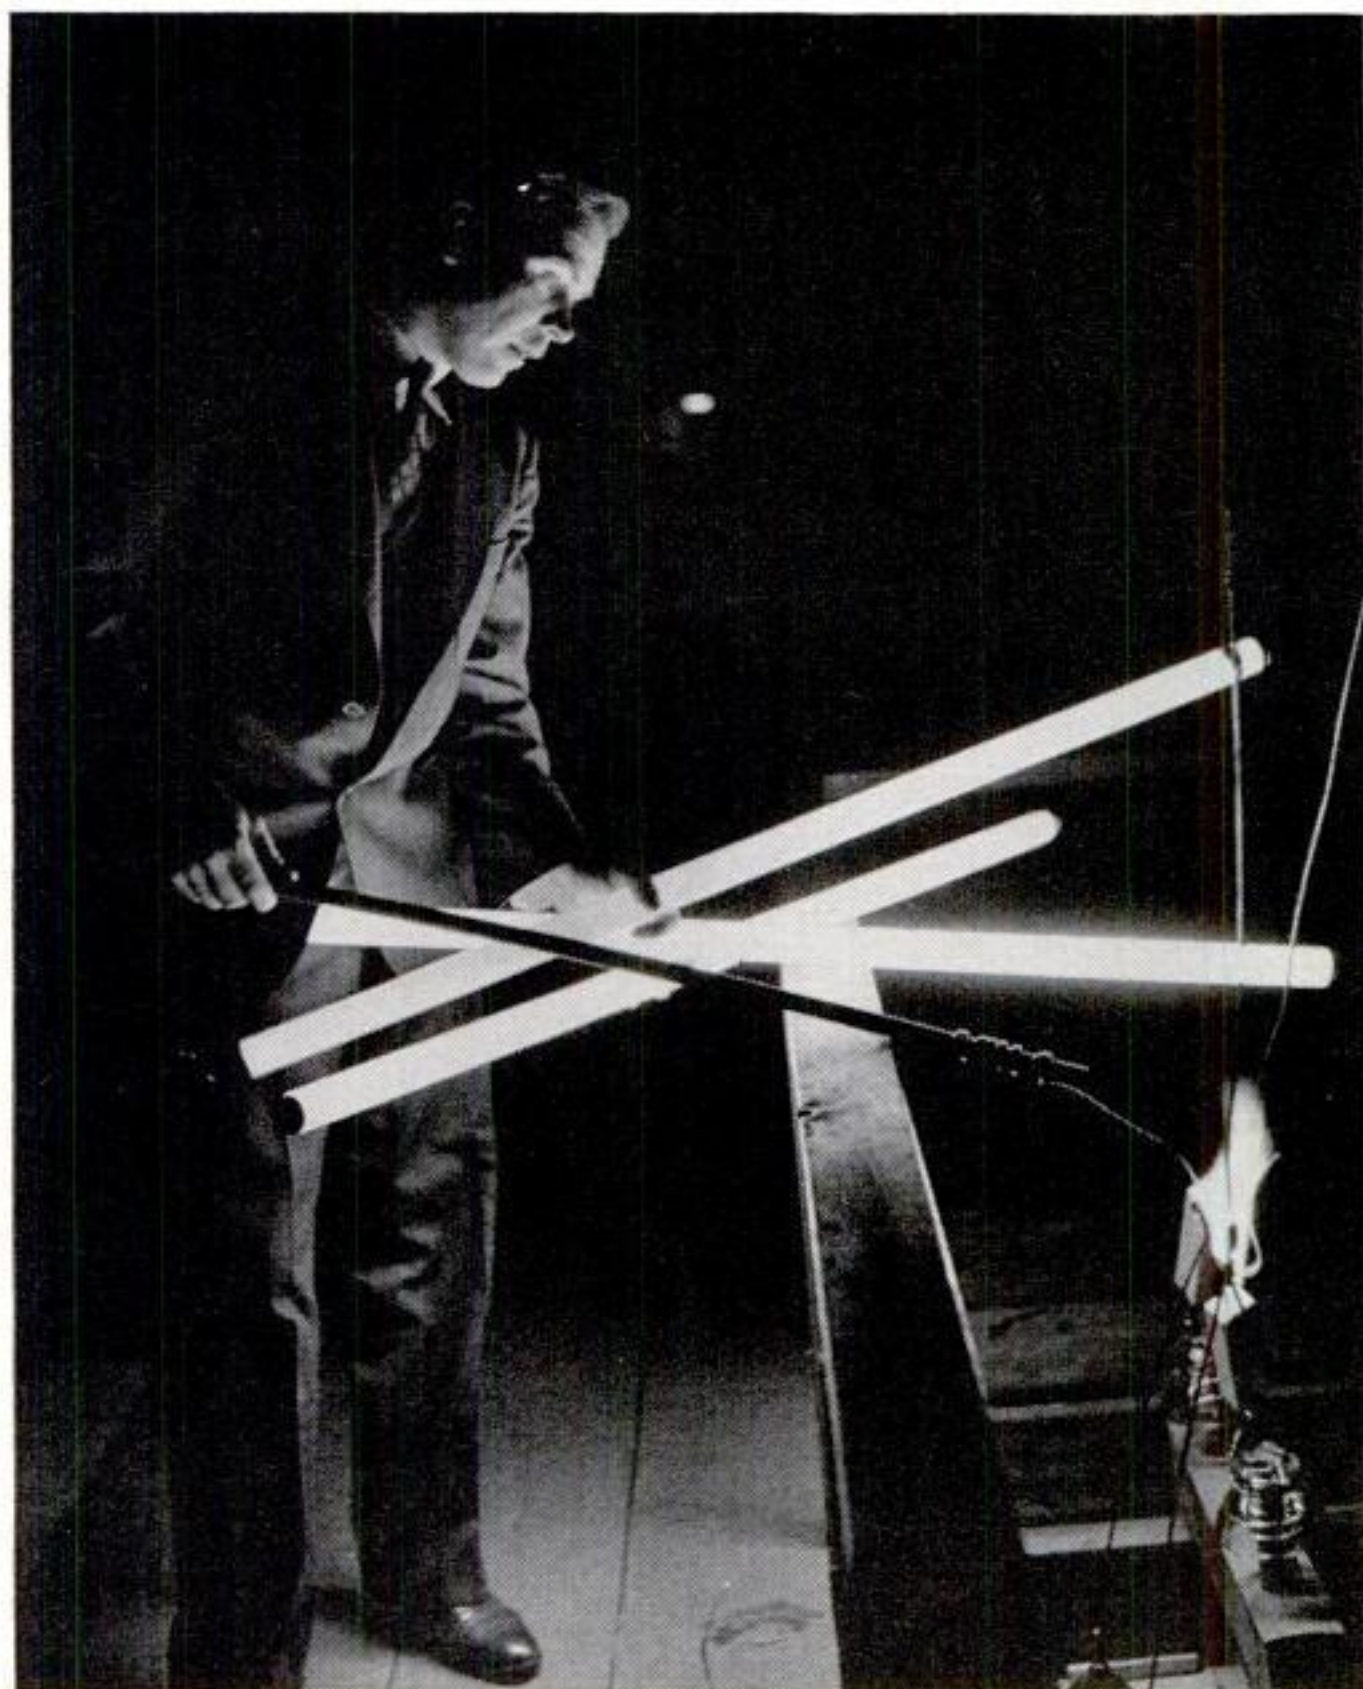

THE NAZIS HATE AND FEAR BOSTON'S STATION WRUL

Not many Americans realize the U. S. is waging a mighty war of propaganda against Adolf Hitler and his allies. U. S. propaganda, however, is quite a different thing from the mixture of Jew-baiting, personal abuse and chest-thumping boasts that sprays nightly from the short-wave stations of Berlin and Breslau. The best propaganda that the U. S. has is the truth. Night and day eleven U. S. short-wave stations, of which the most powerful is Boston's WRUL, are sending large doses of this commodity to millions in Europe, Africa, Asia and friendly Latin America.

Recently, for instance, the Nazi propaganda stations dropped the subject of South Russia after their retreat from Rostov. WRUL's big staff of broadcasters (see next page) took to the air and hammered home the Rostov defeat in 24 languages. Again, at the moment when General Maxime Weygand was deposed from his North African command, WRUL broke through Vichy's censorship and spread the news in French and Arabic. Many African desertions resulted. WRUL's celebrated Yugoslav announcer, Dr. S. S. Petrovitch, is a hero of the present Serbian revolt (see next page). His broadcasts caused the Germans to issue a statement accusing WRUL of "interfering in the affairs of a sovereign nation."

WRUL is run by a radio genius named Walter S. Lemmon who was at the 1919 Peace Conference with Woodrow Wilson and later made millions by inventing single-dial tuning. It is a nonprofit, noncommercial station, supported by Lemmon, gifts from foundations and worldwide listeners. Its staff is largely made up of ardent young refugees and students. Its two transmitters, of 50,000 and 20,000 watts, are a team equaled only by Radio Moscow. Lemmon is stepping up power to a total of 150,000 watts and is talking of an eventual 250,000, which will make WRUL the loudest voice ever heard around the planet.

Fluorescent tubes held near, but not touching, transmitter wires light up and show WRUL's enormous power. Wires give off flames which emit garbled words or music.

From an old brownstone mansion in center of a residential row on Commonwealth Avenue, Boston, Station WRUL carries on its worldwide activities. Offices are marked by U.S. flag.

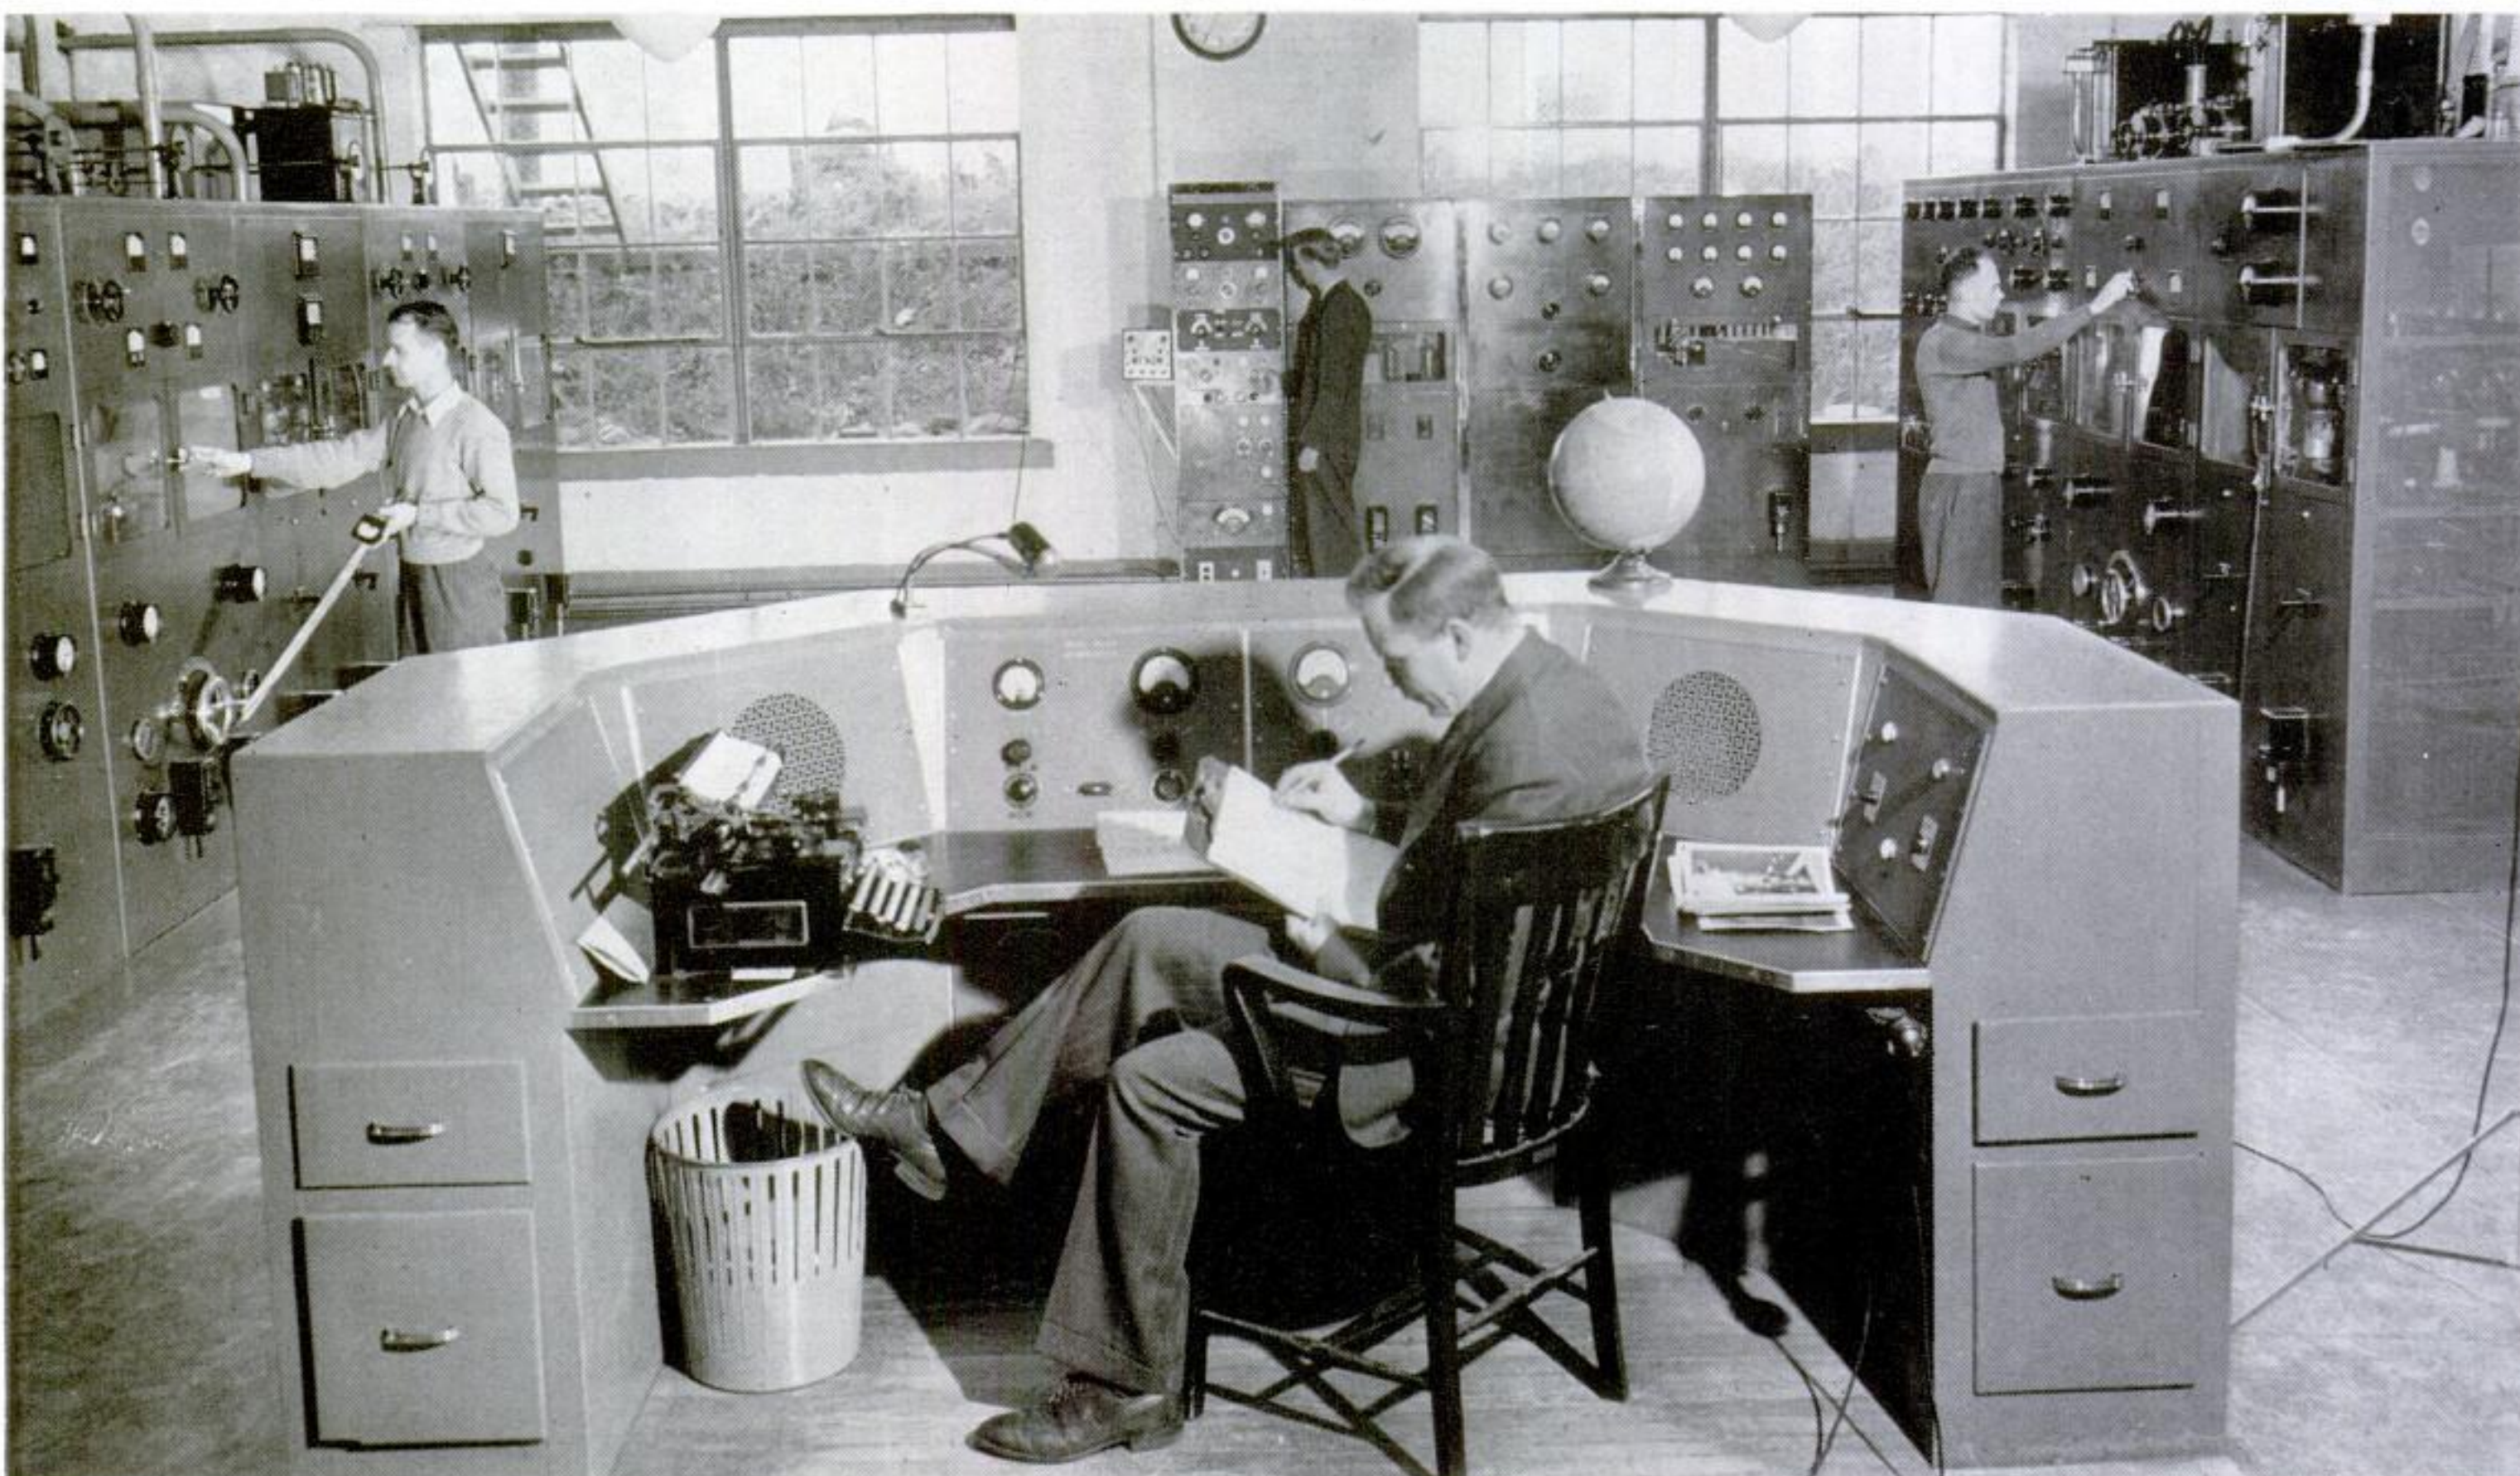

Studio furnishings, including needlepoint chair at right above, were "rifled" from Boston's best families by station's publicity man. The books belong to Historian Samuel Eliot Morison.

Religious broadcasts to Nazi-dominated nations are part of WRUL program. Lutheran services in Finnish, Danish, Norwegian, German are sent from St. Mark's Church, in Roxbury.

From British cruiser "Newcastle" in Boston Harbor, WRUL sends morale-building program to England and British crews at sea. WRUL also broadcasts to Dutch and Norwegian sailors.

Supervisor "Red" Edwards sits at control desk of WRUL's transmitting station at Scituate on the Atlantic Ocean, the most powerful short-wave station in the Western Hemisphere.

It will soon be more powerful than any in world. When hooked together, its two transmitters of 50,000 and 20,000 watts can outshout or jam anything Nazi Germany is known to have.

"For Lasting Pleasure... Give

More lifelike... crystal-clear... now, more than

"NEVER before have I enjoyed records so much! Every new Masterworks album has astonished me with its amazing true-to-life tone. Now, more than ever, great music seems as near, and as real, as the flowers on the table, or the fire flickering on the hearth.

"I listen to my new Columbia album of the 'Daughter of the Regiment,' and feel as though Lily Pons were giving a private performance on the spot. And with symphonies—the same thing! Have you heard Beethoven's 'Eroica,' recorded by Bruno Walter and the great New York Philharmonic? Doesn't it give you that 'Carnegie-Hall-at-Home' feeling?

"Now that Christmas is in the air... each new Columbia release reminds me of someone I know who will share my enthusiasm. The whole world of music is within reach, ready to be tied up in red and green ribbon. Columbia Masterworks have given me my Christmas cue!"

HAVE YOU HEARD THE NEW FULL-DIMENSIONAL TONE?

Here's the secret of that true-to-life tone Miss Lawrence applauds. A new Columbia process eliminates at least 55.3% of the surface noise. (These measurements were taken by the head of an independent, non-commercial communications laboratory.) Thus Columbia alone makes it possible to turn up the tone control of your machine and play Columbia Masterworks with concert-hall realism... bringing you all the lovely, "high-frequency" overtones essential to complete tonal beauty.

No need to blot out rich overtones just to blot out surface noise! No more flat, lifeless "one-dimensional" tone!

NEW PROCESS REDUCES SURFACE NOISE 55.3%

This exclusive new Columbia process applies a layer of fine sensitized material on the sound surface... material which would be prohibitively expensive in ordinary solid-stock records. The result—a brilliance of tone never before achieved... at least 55.3% less surface noise.

Test it! Listen to the new Columbia Masterworks. Then play any regular old-method record at the same tone level. Listen to the difference!

MANUFACTURERS DESIGN ZIPPERLESS FASHIONS

For years metal-zipper industries have been spending thousands of dollars educating the public in the horror and neurosis attendant on "Gap-osis"—bulging lags between fastenings. So well have they told their tale that an estimated 1,300,000,000 buttons a year would be required to take the place of zippers.

Unfortunately, like other consumer industries, zippers are falling on difficult days. Because of defense orders for metal, the supply of zippers has been limited. Result is that many a U. S. dress designer, fearing a zipperless future, is now concentrating on designs for hookless, snapless, zipperless wrap-arounds. In such zipperless fashions, ability to keep a dress neat depends upon well-tied bows and firmly knotted material ends.

WINTER BRINGS PAINFUL RETURN OF INFECTIONS IN NASAL BONES

It is no comfort to its victims to learn that there is no medically recognized disease called "sinus." There are, however, sinuses, which are hollow cavities in the bones in the nasal region of the head. They are subject not to one but to many different kinds of infection, precipitated by many different combinations of factors, including individual anatomy, colds, general systemic diseases, dental infection, allergies. Not the least important factor is the weather, as many new and old sinus sufferers will testify this winter.

Treatment of sinus infections calls, first of all, for direct, local medication and then treatment of secondary causes, and surgery if necessary. Because each dissimilar case responds differently, sinus sufferers bulk large among the hypochondriacs. Subject of the most superstitious shop-talk among sinus hypochondriacs is the minor surgery of puncturing and draining the infected sinus. Worst consequence of this state of mind is the habit of self-medication that brings on the next and perhaps worse attack.

MAGIC BRAIN

RCA VICTROLA

TAKE A LOOK AT DAD! Proud as a peacock... satisfied as a cat. And no wonder—for he's given the family RCA Victrola Model V-215 for Christmas! Now his favorite records will last indefinitely. The Magic Tone Cell, nerve center of the Magic Brain, will see to that. And he'll no longer have to worry about changing old-fashioned needles. For the Magic Tone Cell's Jewel-Lite Scanner ends the need for needles!

MOM'S HAPPY, TOO! She's simply thrilled with the Roll-Out Record Changer. It means no lid to lift, no ornaments to move—permits comfort level loading of records on turntable. Easy to clean. And you should hear her rave about the way the Jewel-Lite Scanner recreates her pet records. She says the brilliant new tone fidelity is faultless!

BETTY'S WILD ABOUT IT! Now she and the gang can have their jive without the bother of changing records. The completely automatic Record Changer takes the work out of record playing! This part of the Magic Brain automatically plays, stops and changes records—even shuts itself off when the last one has been played.

JOE'S STILL AMAZED—can't figure out how the Magic Tone Cell's Flexible Tone Bridge makes objectionable "needle chatter" disappear. And he's itching to play the keen radio. It gets standard, shortwave and foreign programs, has new Teletube, new Audio System for finer amplification, Electric Tuning and scads of other modern features.

GOOD OLD FIDO gets a kick out of Model V-215, too. His wagging tail is evidence of a particular liking for the fine wood in the cabinet. Incidentally, this instrument is available in either walnut or mahogany. See it at your RCA Victor dealer's. Its price, like everything else about it, is a pleasant surprise.

FEWER but FINER!

RCA Victor is cooperating to the full with national defense priority requirements. Because of these requirements, shortages exist in certain raw materials needed for radios and phonograph-radios and there will be a universal decrease in the number of instruments to be made. Hence, RCA Victor products for the home will be fewer. But they will be finer than ever. For, as a result of defense work of which, we, too, are doing our share, RCA Victor quality standards, always the highest, are now more exacting than ever.

Four pairs of sinuses are located in head bones around the nasal passages. Shown also are the turbinates, tissue-covered bones that warm and humidify air passing through nose. Note the proximity of ear passages which are often involved in nasal infections.

TROUBLE STARTS WITH FAILURE OF DRAINAGE

The sinuses, as empty air cells in the nasal bones, perform no active physiological function. From the mucous membrane which lines the sinuses come quantities of the moistening mucous fluid. Healthy sinuses drain this fluid through small ducts into the nasal passages. The main feature of a sinus infection is failure, for a variety of reasons, of drainage through these openings. The antrums, particularly, filled with two to four teaspoonfuls of fluid, become incubators for many species of infectious bacteria. Procedure of treatment is to promote drainage and destroy the bacteria. Drainage may be induced through membrane-shrinking drugs. When this fails, a new opening may be made surgically into the sinuses to permit drainage and direct treatment by irrigation with anti-septic solutions. Scraping of sinus walls is necessary in some cases.

Location of sinuses relative to facial features is here indicated. The sinuses most susceptible to infection are the antrums and ethmoids (see drawing above). The most difficult to treat are the sphenoid sinuses because they lie so far back in head below eyes.

Visual inspection of nasal passage and sinus openings is made with nasopharyngoscope. Most sinus surgery is also performed via nostrils, with use of local anesthetic.

Antrums irrigation is here shown in X-ray, with point of hollow trocar through bone wall into antrum. The solution goes through trocar and drains out through the nose.

X-ray from above shows trocar inside antrum. An informative book for the layman on sinuses and their ills by R. C. Grove, M.D. was recently published by Knopf ($2).

Backing Him Up!

"In all the world no job is being better done today than by the American Railroads"

Hon. Clarence F. Lea of California, Chairman, Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, before the House of Representatives, Sept. 25, 1941

1939 and WAR—and suddenly everybody looked anxiously to the railroads as the life lines of defense. Could they do their part of the job ahead?

They did it in 1939.

They did it again in 1940.

And now the record for 1941 is in—and the railroads have handled the biggest transportation job in history.

The railroads handled more traffic than in the busiest year of the first World War.

— handled more traffic than in the peak year 1929.

— handled two-thirds of all the nation's traffic—all the freight they were asked to haul.

— hauled more tons more miles than any carrier in the world has ever transported in one year before.

The railroads did the job without car shortages—without congestion—for industry—for agriculture—for defense.

That record gives its own emphatic answer to fearful talk of railroad bottlenecks.

There weren't any. And, with the continued cooperation of the government and shippers, there won't be any—provided only that the railroads are permitted to get the materials they must have to keep tracks, locomotives and cars in repair, and to buy new equipment to meet increased defense production.

THE AMERICAN: JOSEPH HARLEY, 28, MACHINIST AT INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER

THE ENGLISHMAN: REGINALD FITZJAMES, 41, FULL-TIME AIR-RAID WARDEN IN LONDON

CHICAGO ASKING LONDON

AN AMERICAN MAN IN THE STREET PUTS BLUNT QUESTIONS TO AN ENGLISH MAN IN THE STREET

Americans and Englishmen probably hold each other in higher regard than do the citizens of any other two nations. Yet almost any American has something he would like to get off his chest about the English, and vice versa. Particularly now that the two nations are so close, many an American would like to sit down with an Englishman and ask him some blunt questions. LIFE here gives one American a chance to do just that. LIFE's Chicago office selected the American to ask the questions and LIFE's London office selected an Englishman to answer them.

The American is Joseph Harley, a tool machinist. He is married, has three children and commutes in his own car to his job at the International Harvester plant. He is third-generation American, of Irish-English descent.

The Englishman is Reginald Fitzjames, an air-raid warden and head fireguard in the Paddington district of London. Before the war he was a furniture salesman. He is married and has two daughters working in munitions factories.

1 The English toolmakers Ford imported in Detroit are unapproachable, clannish and thorough snobs, as are Englishmen of the upper classes we meet in the Midwest. Are all Englishmen like that?

You're right about upper-class Englishmen being snobs—not only in America but over here, too. The aristocrats are not snobbish, but the new rich are pretty bad, and the middle classes worse than any.

An Englishman working in America may seem clannish and unapproachable, but are you sure you're not being put off by his accent? You shouldn't judge a man by his speech. The English workman is always keen to make friends with his mates, but you have to remember he is in a strange country. He may be feeling, too, that he is doing an American out of a job. I think it's up to an American to say: "Come on and have one, Bill." The Englishman is supposed to be cold and reserved, but he thaws out in the end—both in battle and in everyday life.

2 There are millions of dollars of British capital invested in this country and yet we send you lease-lend goods without a word about payment. If there ever is a payment will we have to dig it out of the pockets of ordinary Brit-ishers, from British investments, or are we supposed to skip the whole thing?

This is a blunt question and it wants a blunt answer. Isn't it a bit early for America to be talking about payment for lease-lend materials when less than 1% of the materials which have arrived here has been supplied under lease-lend? Almost everything from America in the first two years of the war was paid for in hard British cash and carried by the British.

If we win the war it won't be in America's interest to force Britain into bankruptcy by demanding immediate payment for lease-lend materials. If we don't win the war Americans won't have this question troubling them—I think the best thing is not to worry so much about where the payment is coming from as to make sure we're able to pay. As our Winnie says: "We are supplying the men and they are supplying the tools."

3 What is England going to do about the refugee governments and the people who have been urged to revolt in conquered countries if you can't even take a chance at invading the continent while Hitler's army is fighting in Russia?

Your question needs two answers. First: England is giving the refugee governments sanctuary because they've got nowhere else to go in Europe. She doesn't propose to dictate to them and you've got to remember that England's won't be the only voice at the peace table. Anyway we are not urging the occupied countries to revolt now—what we have done is urge sabotage and the "go slow" policy.

Second: One thing that's on everybody's tongue over here is that Germany has 80% of her armies on the Eastern Front, so why don't we have a go in the West? But we're only the people who have to do the fighting—our leaders get the blame if we make a mess of it. And they have to be sure of America. If they were sure you'd look after Japan—if, instead of using half our fleet to guard the Atlantic, the Pacific and the Far East, we could have that half to cover an invasion. It would make a big difference.

4 We are told you are fighting to preserve democracy and the good things of life, but what reliable assurance have you that you won't be doublecrossed or misled again by your own leaders?

First, I'd like to say we're fighting to establish a true democracy and not to preserve one. I don't believe a true democracy has existed yet.

We've got this assurance that we won't be misled again: the people have developed a new spirit. The war has roused our sense of responsibility just like the last war did, but this time everyone remembers what happened afterward. This time there will be no slipping back. We have to clean up the political machine so that we'll get men in the Government chosen by the people. The people will make their demands to the men they are putting in power and the people will see that their leaders do what they want.

5 We hear lots about Winston Churchill as a great war leader, David Margesson as a powerful Tory, and Ernest Bevin as a labor leader. Who is really who over there, and what do you think about them?

Churchill is our leader and it doesn't matter what they say about him—he's a great leader. He's a democrat, too, and he'll lead at the peace table.

Margesson is the "old-school-tie boy" and the most undemocratic man in the Cabinet. He was put in because Churchill wasn't strong enough to throw him out—in other words, the Conservative political machine was too strong for Churchill.

I knew Ernie Bevin when he used to punch the Bible. He's one of the workingmen and I think he's a good Minister of Labor.

Beaverbrook, of course, is Churchill's mouthpiece. There's a lot of blah and all that, but it's good stuff. He's got a hold on the people because he has a strong personality. He wasn't popular before the war, but the cream comes to the top in wartime—it brought Churchill to the top, too.

Herbert Morrison is a Cockney and he's in charge of London. He knows what Londoners think and what Londoners want.

We don't hear much about poor Eden at the Foreign Office but I think he's a sound man—he was the one who told Chamberlain where he got off and he has the courage of his convictions.

There's another thing that matters. We must have a new Archbishop of Canterbury. The Church is a very powerful force and it should have a good militant leader. The Vatican has a good leader in the Pope—we should make sure of a good man in our Church.

The King, of course, is our figurehead. He's a good fellow and he gets about and sees things for himself. But the people who really matter in the Government are Churchill, Bevin and Beaverbrook.

6 I know this is a touchy subject, but who in hell really owes whom on the debts of the last war?

The cash debts between the nations are about 50-50; we are due as much as we owe. Our late Allies and our present enemies owe us money, we owe the U. S. money, but the account can't be settled now. Certainly America paid five billion dollars in the last war but with it she bought her security and American big business made huge profits. So it can hardly be regarded as a loan to be repaid in cash. A debt no nation has ever settled is the one Capital owes Labor and the unfulfilled promises to our fighting men.

7 In some of his speeches Churchill seems to have promised the conquered countries full sovereignty after the war, apparently with the restoration of pre-war governments. Is Britain then committed to set up all the ineffective little European states again, or do you have a plan to work on at the eventual peace conference which will help clean up Europe for a change?

Churchill cannot make promises to the occupied countries for after the war. He has never given pledges to set up the little states again, and anyway these little states were President Wilson's idea in the first place. This time we intend the peace conference to plan for peace, not for an armed truce. My workmates and I are just as keen about cleaning up Europe as you are. We think the best scheme would be a United States of Europe. They would be governed by central control to which each state would send representatives, the number of representatives varying according to its population. Russia must be included—there must be an end to the idea that Russia has not a part to play in Europe.

8 Out here newspapers are always carrying stories about sharp British trade practices such as American firms being underbid on South American orders by British firms using lease-lend goods, and of one U. S. manufacturer getting aluminum from Britain when he couldn't get it here because of our own priorities ruling. What about this?

Both the White House and Westminster have refuted the rumors about Britain using lease-lend materials for re-export. Goods can be exported from this country only under license, and a license is hard to get. You have to remember, too, that it is very difficult to clamp down on exports overnight. British firms had certain commitments before lease-lend came into force which still had to be fulfilled. Britain still does export certain goods; for instance, some cotton to the Empire and even to South America, but it is specially processed cotton which only Lancashire can make and may contain American raw cotton. Apart from that, we are in too great need of the materials America sends to be able to spare them for re-export. There are actually times when our factories have to stop work for lack of raw materials.

9 Besides indefinite talk about preserving democracy, what definite things do the people want in order eventually to improve standards of living, social conditions and the political setup?

The British standard of living is comparatively high but can stand improvement. Social conditions need cleaning up. We should have wholesale slum clearance in every industrial city—a five-year plan would be a good idea. So far the mistake in slum clearing has been to move people to fine housing estates miles from their work so they can't afford to pay the daily fares to get to their factories. Wages generally should be increased—20% on pre-war figures would be reasonable. And as we pay Winnie, our top man, £5,000 a year, I think that could be the maximum income for anyone. Social services need nationalizing. The first steps to this have been taken in our war emergency services—for instance, the Emergency Medical Service. Hospitals, transport, electricity and other community services should be nationalized, but I don't hold with communal feeding. It's the family unit that matters and all this communal living business tends to break it up.

10 I tell you frankly that, although many Americans have a new respect for the British people for the way they've carried on, there are many people here who think the British Empire is washed up and that Britain is always getting into trouble, dragging in others and thus trying to get out of paying for her own mistakes. Just as frankly, what do the British think of the Americans?

Thanks for the respect. When the British Empire gets washed up, the U. S. had better prepare for her own funeral. Again, I don't think we have the monopoly on getting others into trouble. Isn't it rather a case of self-preservation? Others have thrown their lot in with us because they thought it was to their advantage to do so. It seems to me very much a case of identification of the same interests.

I don't think the Americans like us much. We think you are okay, but your ears are always wagging for rumors. You suffer, too, from the same fault as we do: you sermonize and criticize too much. It seems to me that you base your values mainly on money. I imagine America is a grand country if you're a success.

11 Do you blame the Irish, with their past hatreds, and the exploited people of India for not caring much about what happens to England?

I don't blame the Irish for past hatreds, but I think they realize their luck will be out if England sinks. The same goes for India. Englishmen know as well as any wise guy that mistakes in administration have been made in India, but it is the toughest problem any empire could have to face. It will have to be faced sometime, but the middle of a total war hardly seems the best time to choose.

12 With winter coming on, are you going to have enough food and clothing to get by, and will you have to go back to living in those subways?

With America's help we hope to get enough food and clothing this winter. Shelters have been improved with lighting, heating and sanitation since last winter. Whether we have to go in the subways again depends on Jerry.

13 Now that you are allied with Russia, do you think the common people will be influenced to change the traditional form of the British Government?

I don't think our collaboration with Russia will change the pageantry of our traditional form of government. We like pageantry and we like our traditions. I think there will be other changes in the form of government. For instance, we don't need the House of Lords. Brains will matter more than birth and breeding when it comes to choosing our representatives, and the fusion of the classes will show itself in Parliament. This process has been going on gradually since the last war. The present war and our alliance with Russia has hastened the process. The primary reason for our alliance with Russia was, after all, the necessity for the destruction of Nazism.

14 If the U. S. really gets into this war, do you see any way to gain victory without our having to send over an expeditionary force to meet and defeat Hitler's land armies?

Yes, I think we can win without an A.E.F. if America will guard our flanks in the Far East, Africa and the North Atlantic. America can pluck the flower of safety from this particular nettle.

QUESTIONER: These questions may have been blunt but they are what we and my pals at the shop sit around and talk about. Too bad we can't get together for a round of beers and really get everything settled. Best of luck.

ANSWERER: Talking things over together is fine, but don't carp too much and remember Nazism has to be beaten if you want to survive. As we can't meet for a beer yet, have one for me at Joe's place. I'll have one for you at the King's Head.

Scraping mud off shoe with butt of gun, Jean Burnes may jar the gun into firing and shoot anyone near. Her peaked hunter's cap, tweed jacket, corduroy skirt, socks and the shoes are by Abercrombie & Fitch.

Looking down barrel of a gun is a common cause of accidents. When inspecting or cleaning, gun should always be broken and unloaded. Look down breech, not muzzle.

HOW NOT TO HANDLE A GUN

At least 2,000 persons will have been killed in hunting accidents before the 1941 hunting season is over. Insurance company statistics prove that most of these fatalities result from obvious and silly mistakes in handling a gun, such as those shown on this page. Here Jean Burnes, who had never fired a gun before, demonstrates (with an unloaded shotgun) how not to handle it.

These pictures were taken at the Bayside, Long Island, shooting ground of the famous sporting-goods house of Abercrombie & Fitch, whose crack gun coach, John Schaefer, will not allow his pupils to fire a shot until they have been trained in basic rules for safety. Rifles are even more dangerous than shotguns because of their greater range.

While Miss Burnes's mistakes may seem ludicrous, there is little humor in the fact that last year one principal cause of accidental deaths to persons in the U. S. from 25 to 64 years old was the careless handling of firearms. Elementary common sense demands that a hunter handle every gun as if it were loaded; never point it at anything he does not want to shoot; avoid all horseplay.

When climbing rocks or going through rough country gun should always be broken. Here Coach Schaefer shows safe method as Miss Burnes risks falling and firing gun.

In open country, best way to carry gun is against shoulder with the muzzle pointed harmlessly in air, finger off trigger. Girl's gun could easily fire and injure companion.

Leaning on gun, muzzle down, may clog barrel and cause an explosion when fired.

Leaning on gun, butt down, can be fatal if the gun should be suddenly dislodged.

Many gun accidents occur long after the hunting is over, especially in transit. Never place a gun in a car, or bring it home, without first making sure that it is unloaded.

Men: Take a Christmas hint from Rosalind Russell

Lovely Rosalind Russell—star of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's recent hit, "The Feminine Touch"—has this to say to men who want to please at Christmas:

"If you want to give someone special a gift that will thrill her on Christmas morning... a gift she'll always have and always love... give her silver! And make it the finest silverplate money can buy... 1847 Rogers Bros. Silverplate.

"She'll adore any one of the 1847 Rogers Bros. patterns. They're all so gorgeous... especially their exciting, new 'Eternally Yours.' And you're in for a pleasant surprise when you discover how truly moderate 1847 Rogers Bros.' prices are.

ARMY VEHICLES

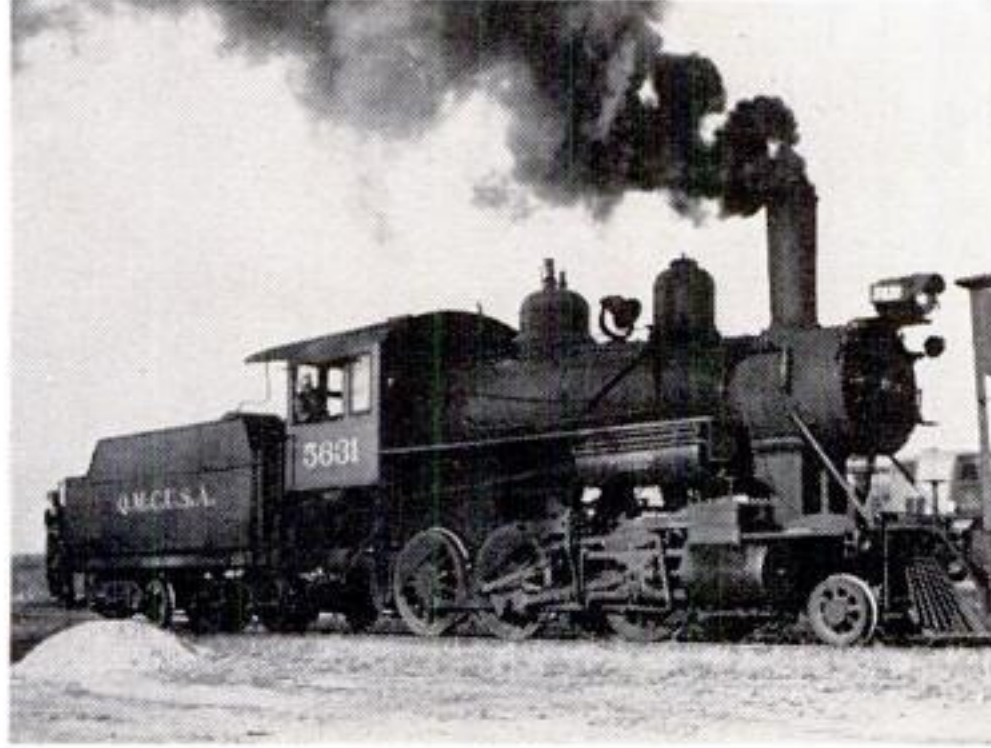

THEY RANGE FROM PEEWEE
CARS TO BIG PRIME MOVERS

If war comes today, the 1,500,000 soldiers in the U. S. Army will go riding off to battle in 300,000 vehicles, ranging in size from motorcycles and peewee cars to huge 6-ton prime movers, capable of hauling 8-ton anti-aircraft guns. Some of these vehicles, like tanks and half-tracks, will see action on the front lines. The others will be kept busy doing supply and maintenance work. Together they will make the U. S. Army the most highly motorized force in the world.

Shown on these four pages are 57 different kinds of Army vehicles. They are used for every conceivable purpose. There are locomotives, scout cars, ambulances, pile drivers, cargo carriers and pigeon lofts. The variety of trucks is endless, but actually there are only seven basic types ($\frac{1}{4}$ -ton, $\frac{1}{2}$ -ton, $1\frac{1}{2}$ -ton, $2\frac{1}{2}$ -ton, $1\frac{1}{2}$ -3-ton, 4-ton and 6-ton) to which have been added various bodies and attachments.

Two years ago the Army had only 12,000 vehicles. Two years from now it will have, if necessary, 1,000,000. Chiefly responsible for this tremendous production are the Quartermaster Corps, whose job is to procure trucks, and the automobile industry, whose job is to build them. To ensure this mass production of vehicles, the automobile industry has merely adapted the best of its regular commercial models to military uses. According to some critics this has prevented U. S. trucks, not essentially designed for military use, from being as sturdy and strong as they might be.

BEATRICE GROVER'S "BROAD STRIPES AND BRIGHT STARS" (GREYSTONE) IS A BEST-SELLER

"LEIF THE LUCKY" (DOUBLEDAY, DORAN) TELLS PRIMITIVE HISTORY OF THE U. S.

CHILDREN'S BOOKS

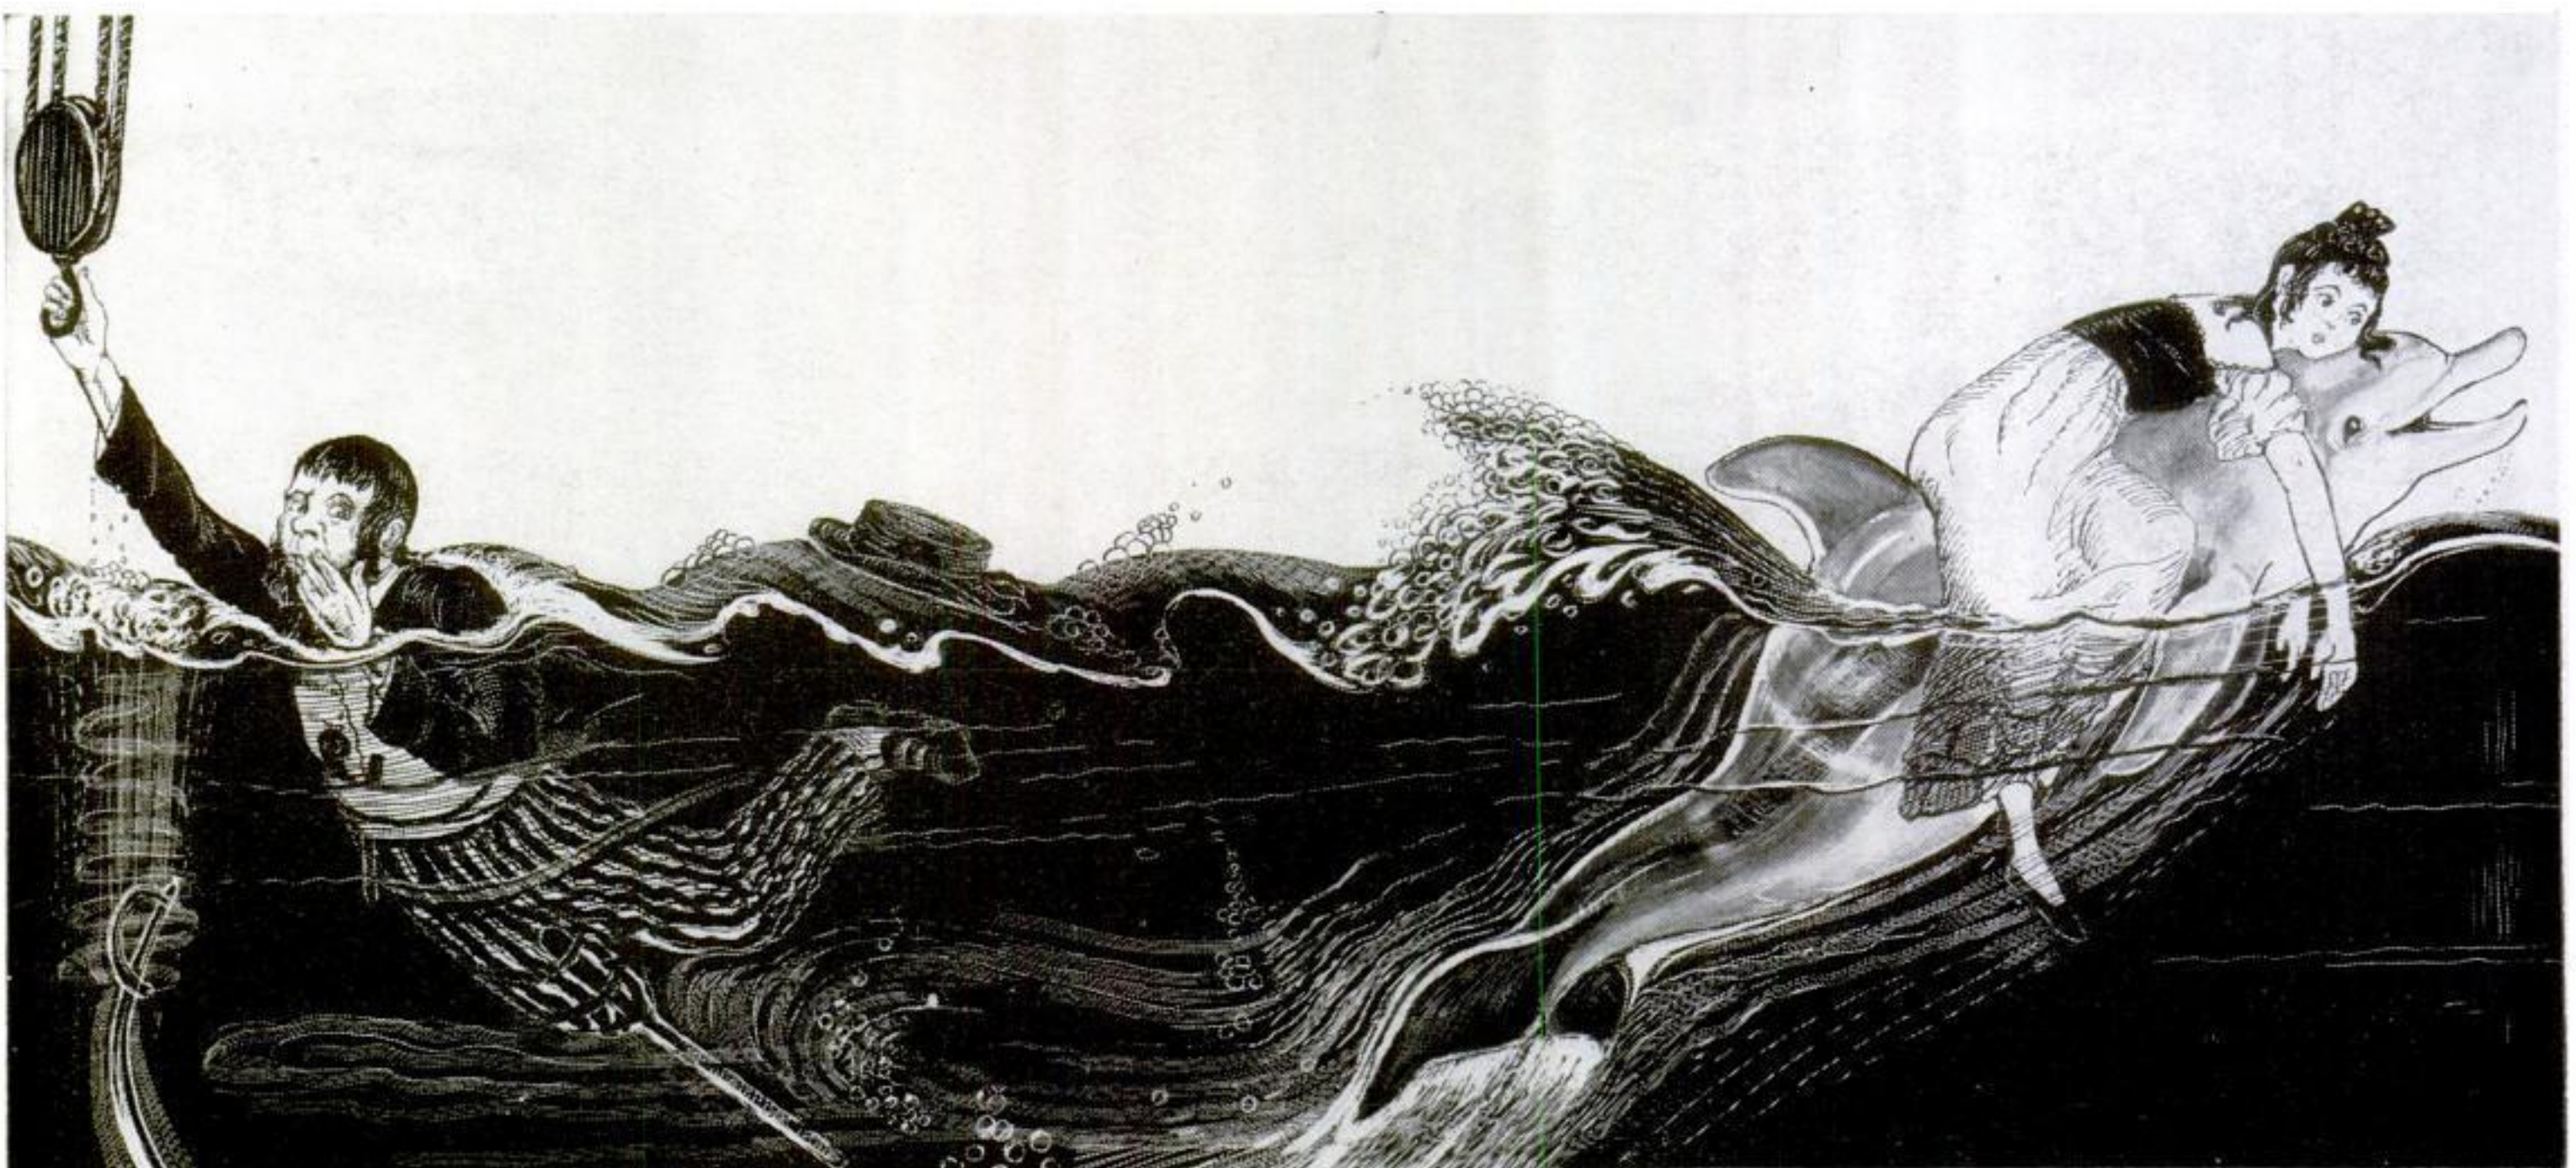

THEY ARE PRETTY TO LOOK AT,
BUT KIDS ARE TOUGH CRITICS

Twenty years ago a child's book was a pretty drab little package. Perhaps its binding and printing were kept deliberately dreary on the theory that reading matter for youngsters, like medicine, must be somewhat distasteful to be really good.

Today children's books blaze with brilliant color and delight the eye with clever design. Written by top U. S. authors and drawn by the best of illustrators, they cover almost every conceivable topic from bugs to airplanes, from science to history, from fact to fantasy. So important have they become to the publishing trade that what was once a haphazard sideline turned out, in 1940, 984 separate titles (total U. S. publishers' output was 11,328 titles) which exceeded in sales all other classes of books save fiction.

New printing techniques and a new grasp of child psychology are responsible for this change. The children themselves, however, have other changes to suggest. Invited for the first time as critics to a Child Study Association book exhibit in New York held on Dec. 2, they recommended more cartoons, more sea and mystery stories, fewer "rosy" biographies and more consultation with them on what they like to read.

"Adolphus" (Houghton, Mifflin, $1.50) has verses by William Rose Benét and drawings by Marjorie Flack that actually succeed in making a fish funny. Here the playful porpoise is gracefully rescuing the maiden Angelica from a hateful peg-legged pirate. Miss Flack, a popular children's author and illustrator, recently became the wife of Poet Benét.

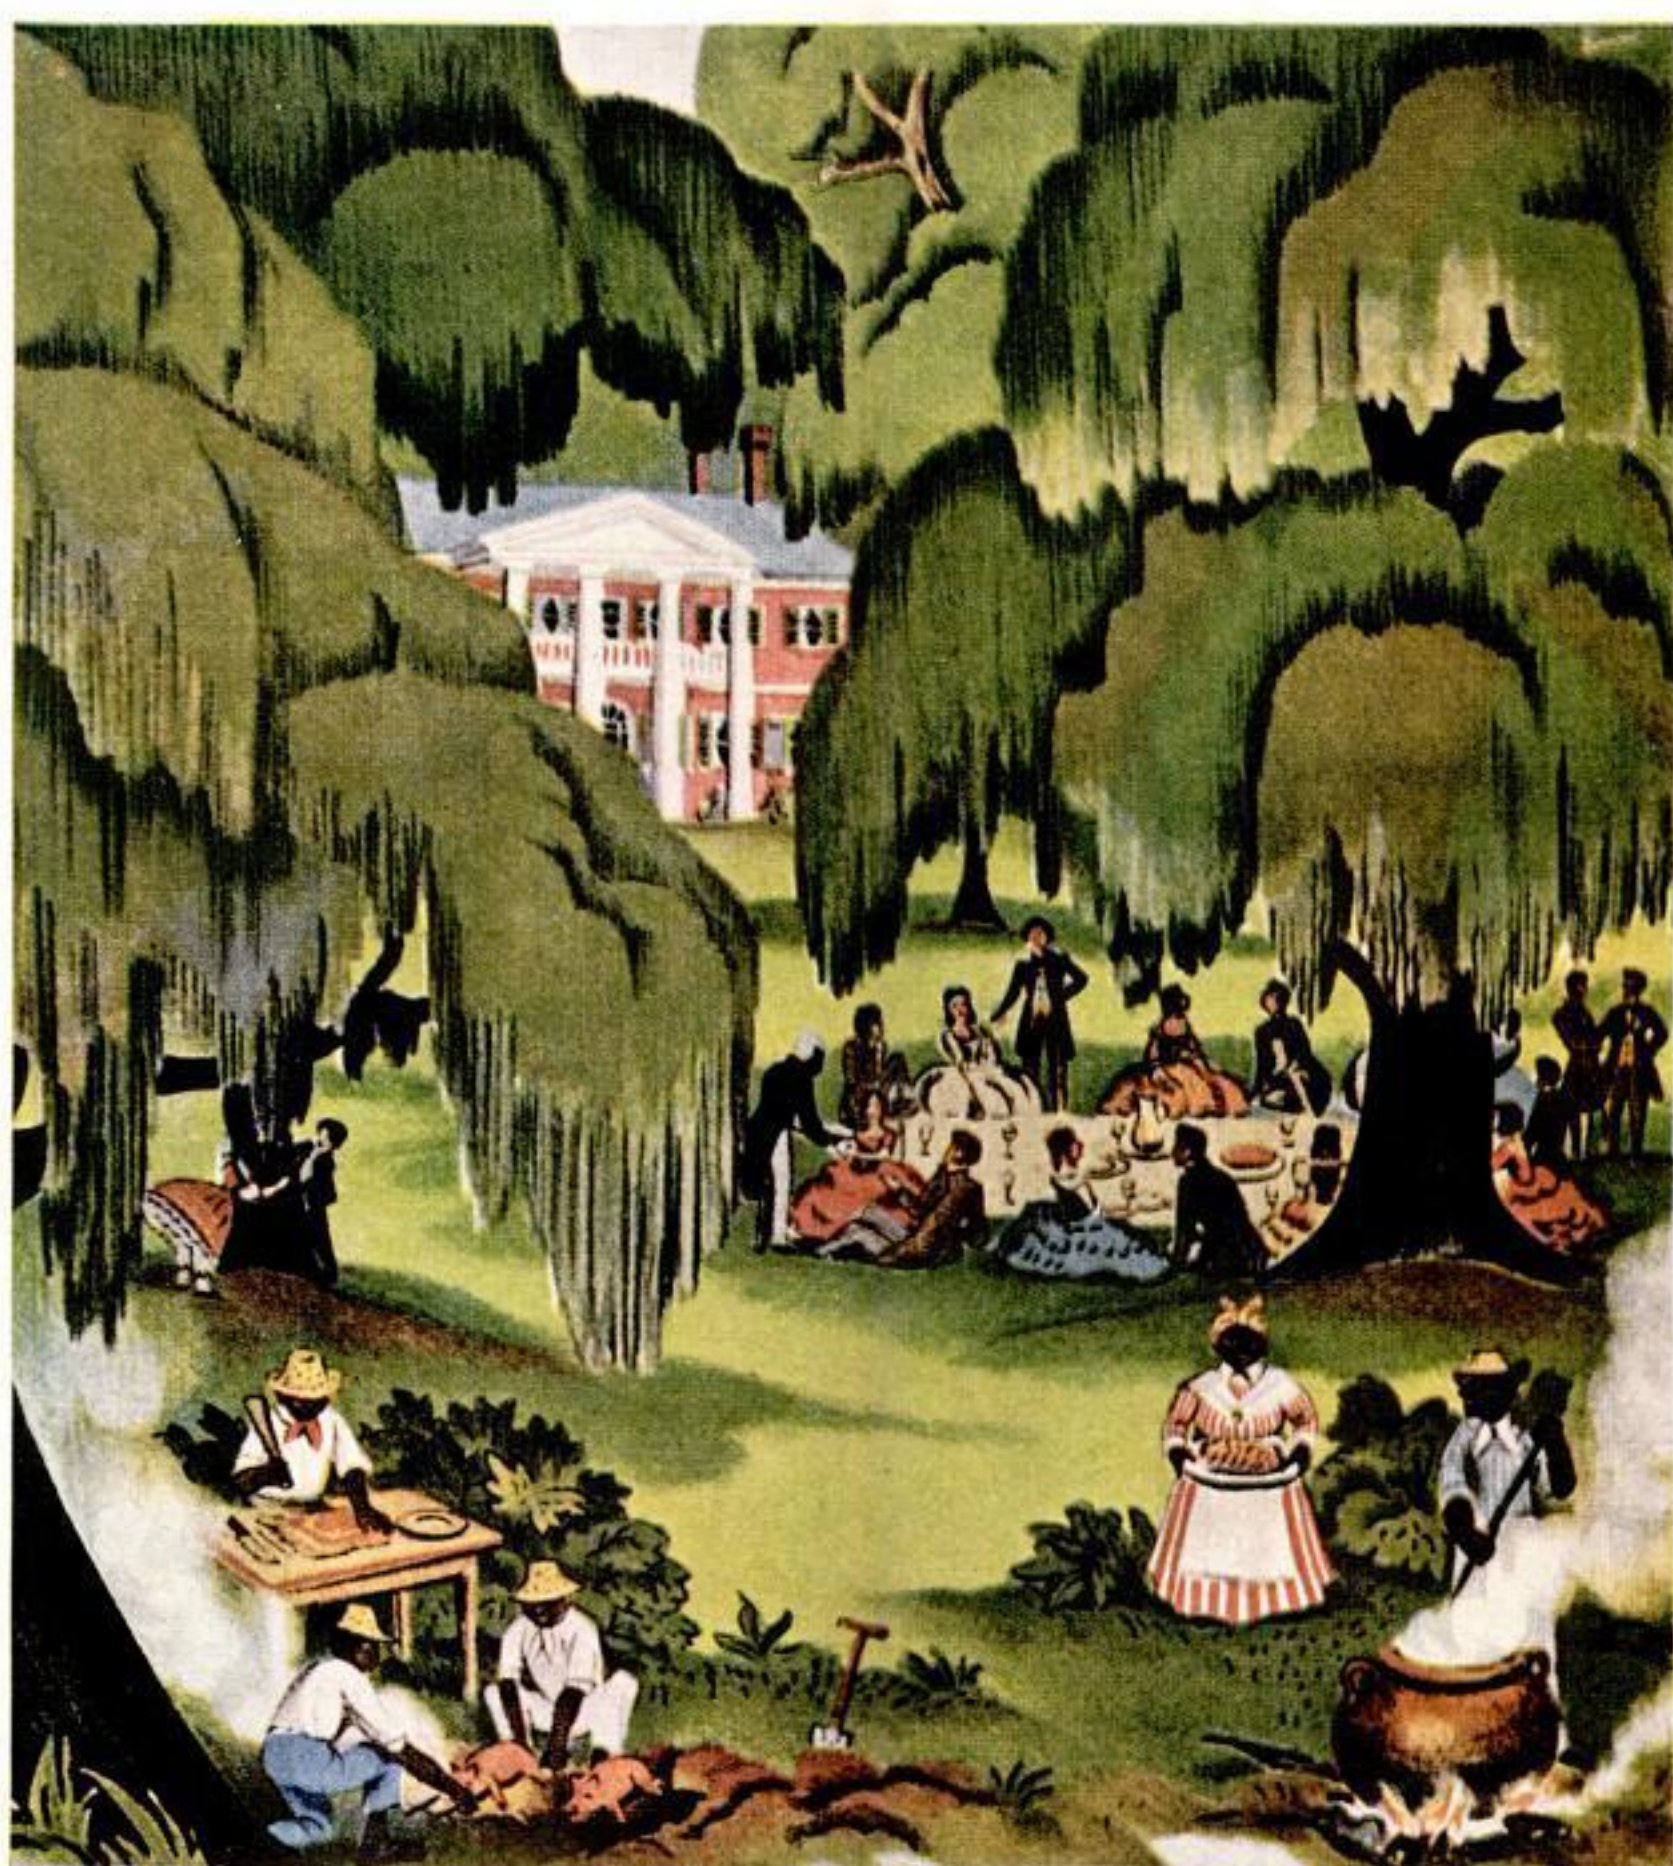

"Topsy Turvy Circus" goes topsy-turvy when a malicious green crocodile locks the circus owners in a cage and makes them perform. The colorful illustrations, children's art at its best, are by Hungarian-born Tibor Gergely. Text is by French-born Georges Duplaix. Since both are living in the U.S., they joined to produce this handsome book for Harper ($1.50).

"A Child's Book of Prayers" (Random House, $1.50) combines prayers with drawings that look like old Christmas cards. Artist is Masha (Mrs. Marie Stern).

"The Story of the Mississippi" has magnificent sketches by C. H. DeWitt of life along the big river. This one shows a day on the old plantation. Marshall McClintock is the author, Harper the publisher ($1).

"The Flying Locomotive" (Viking Press, $1) is 25-year-old William Pène du Bois's sixth book. This one is about a cheese-train engine that yearned to be a flyer and was granted its wish.

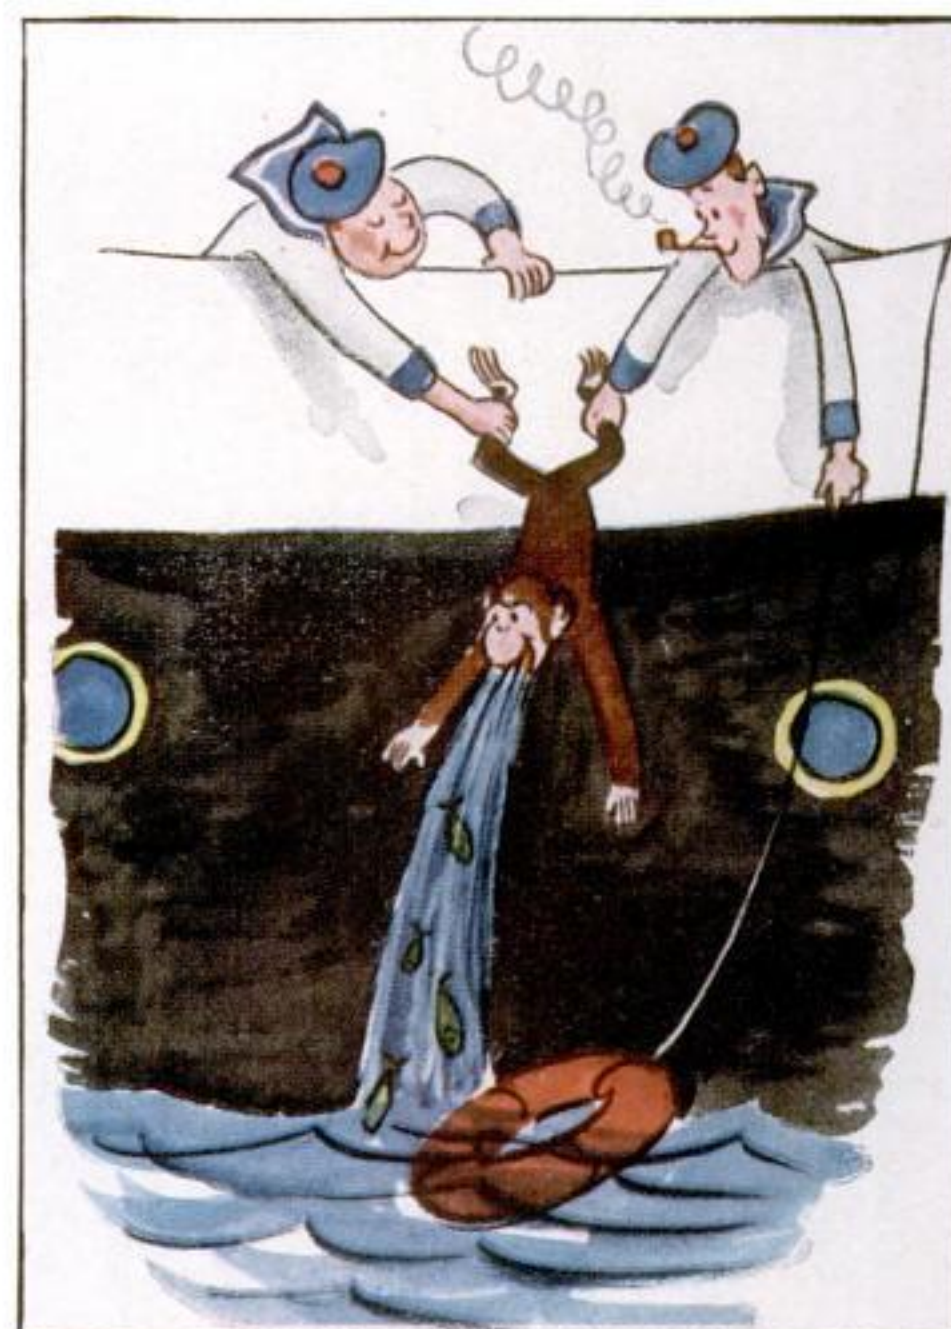

Madame Suzie, the prizewinning cow, acts as aerial scout for the flying locomotive. Young Du Bois, a precise, charming draftsman, is now a private in the Coast Artillery at Bermuda.

"Paul Bunyan" is Ida Virginia Turney's story of America's logger giant and his great Blue Ox (Binfords & Mori, $1.50).

"The Matchlock Gun" (Dodd, Mead, $2) is Indian-raid tale by Novelist Walter Edmonds and Lithographer Paul Lantz.

"Curious George" (Houghton Mifflin, $2) is the name of a mischievous monkey. Its author, H. A. Rey, is a Frenchman.

"And To Think That I Saw It On Mulberry Street" doesn't make very much sense but it's a great children's favorite. Its verses about the lad who was told to keep his eyes open on the way to school match its buoyant drawings. No wonder, since both come from Dr. Seuss (Ted Geisel), famous for his "Quick, Henry, the Flit!" ads. The publisher is Vanguard Press, $1.25.

Ball of Fire

Eight professors and a strip-tease queen tangle in a comedy of slang

At one point in RKO's Ball of Fire, Gary Cooper quotes Carl Sandburg's famous definition of slang: "Slang is language that takes off its coat, spits on its hands, and gets to work."

Thereupon Cooper himself, straight from his gun-toting roles in Sergeant York and The Westerner, gets to work as a scholarly professor from Princeton hunting specimens of current slang for a new encyclopedia. On his slang-hunt Cooper invades pool rooms, ball parks, and finally the dressing room of Sugarpuss O'Shea, a night-club singer played by Barbara Stanwyck. When the beautiful Sugarpuss in turn invades the bookish household of Cooper and his seven elderly colleagues, like Snow White visiting the Seven Dwarfs, the effect is so devastating after three days that Cooper orders her to leave, saying: "Make no mistake, I shall regret the absence of your keen mind. Unfortunately, it is inseparable from an extremely disturbing body." Eventually, however, after the professors outwit a pack of gangsters, Cooper makes an adjustment to both the body and mind of Sugarpuss O'Shea which is a credit to the entire academic profession.

Customarily, the last people to be praised publicly for a motion picture are the men who wrote it. Here let it be recorded that Charles Brackett and Billy Wilder have written in Ball of Fire an original and diverting script. Its director, Howard Hawks, has wisely steered it away from too much whimsy. And the seven estimable gentlemen who play the elderly encyclopedists are, as Sugarpuss O'Shea puts it, "squirrely cherubs right out of this world." Produced by Samuel Goldwyn with rare good humor and good taste, Ball of Fire is a surefire holiday delight.

"Shocking!" says Lawyer Freeman (at right) when he finds, after spending nine years writing a new encyclopedia, the professors are only on "S." "Slap it together," says the lawyer. "We are not the slapping-together kind," says Gary Cooper (center). Rich Miss Totten agrees to continue endowing the encyclopedia after a smile from Cooper.

Hunting for slang for the "S" section of encyclopedia, Cooper collides with chorus girls while visiting a night-club strip-teaser, Sugarpuss O'Shea. Below: Sugarpuss unexpectedly drops in on the professors, ostensibly to help them with their slang. She pleads a sore throat so she can stay the night, but actually she is hiding from gangsters.

Respectably to bed file the professors after they have agreed to let beautiful Sugarpuss O'Shea spend the night under their roof. Gary Cooper (left) is their self-appointed guardian of morals.

"Left, right, shove with your hips," says Sugarpuss, teaching professors to dance the conga after they have failed to master it by compound fractions and mathematical diagrams on the carpet.

CHANDELIER IS HOUSEKEEPER WHO FIGHTS A LOSING BATTLE TO KEEP ORDER

"I'm going to show you what yum-yum is," asserts Sugarpudding O'Shea, standing on books to teach Cooper something which she feels has been overlooked in his education.

DEB SCORES ON AFTER-DARK DATES

Joan Martin, one of New York's most glamorous debutantes, bestows a camellia on her current Romeo, at a dance at New York's St. Regis. Her pre-evening beauty ritual? "I always take a Woodbury Facial Cocktail before dressing for a date. It whips up a nice rosy pink in my cheeks." Woodbury Facial Soap is strictly a skin soap of choicest beauty oils. Try it for just 10 days. You'll be thrilled with the new freshness in your complexion.

Cholly Knickerbocker, society reporter, hot on the news of Joan's popularity, learns: "I just splash my face with a fragrant lather of Woodbury Facial Soap. It chases away that lazy-skin look and clears my skin instantly.

"Every trace of make-up disappears. When I rinse with cold water, it's a joy to see how dewy-fresh my skin becomes. Nice, too, are the after-effects of my Woodbury Facial Cocktail. Dates, flattery, compliments galore.

"I'm pleased with the improvement Woodbury has made in my looks. My complexion seems finer and softer these days. Doubtless the fact that Woodbury Soap is made by skin scientists for the delicate skin accounts for that!"

"For the Skin You Love to Touch," use only Woodbury. Try it for just 10 days for complexion and bath. Tuck Woodbury into your week-end traveling case, too. See your skin acquire new appealing smoothness. Only 10¢.

A gangster is knocked out when professor focuses a beam of sunlight through a microscope and burns a picture cord. The falling picture will conk him on the head.

Brawn versus brain is exemplified in this fight between gangster and Cooper, who tries to use old-fashioned boxing rules. Cooper forgets rules when he is really mad.

Cooper and Sugarpudd ride home on the back of a garbage truck, after he has proved his devotion by getting a black eye. The gangsters are locked inside with the garbage.

"Nobody's trying to make you a goat!" coaxed Elsie

"THEN why," demanded Elmer, "am I the only one around here who has to make New Year's resolutions?"

Elsie, the Borden Cow, explained: "My resolutions all have been made for me. Long ago—by the Borden experts and scientists who make sure that I always lead a pure and blameless life."

"Some life!" grunted Elmer. "Do you think I'd let myself in for anything like that in writing?"

"It's a wonderful life!" Elsie protested: "I love knowing that it helps me to bring purer, better Borden's Milk to people. And heaps of pure, delightful things that are made from that milk. It proves that good resolutions are certainly worth while."

"I presume," said Elmer, sarcastically, "that you have in mind a few suggestions as to what resolutions I should make?"

"Yes, indeed," Elsie replied happily. "You should resolve not to lose your temper any more. Keep cool—the way folks do with Borden's Ice Cream. Though I think they principally like it for the smooth, pure, lusciousness it gets from such grand milk and cream."

"I see," frowned Elmer. "Back to your milk and cream again. Well, what's next on my good resolutions?"

"You might try being good to children," Elsie suggested. "So that mothers learn to look up to you and trust you—the way they do Borden's Irradiated Evaporated Milk. That's so digestible and rich in vitamin D that doctors approve it for babies. And it's the secret of lovely cream soups and fluffy mashed potatoes, too."

"I never realized before how improving good resolutions could be," snarled Elmer.

"I'm so glad you're being sensible," Elsie beamed. "You can also resolve to develop the sweet side of your character, Elmer. Everyone loves sweetness—particularly the scrumptious sweetness of the marvelous cookies, candies, and cake frostings that are made with Borden's Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk."

"You're not afraid, are you," rumbled Elmer menacingly, "of overdoing my Great Reform? Perhaps I shouldn't try too suddenly to give up all my old habits."

"We must all make sacrifices," Elsie blithely encouraged. "I know I feel fully rewarded for some of mine every time I see a creamy, golden-crust piece of Borden's Liederkranz—one of the noblest of the distinguished family of Borden's Fine Cheeses."

"It must be nice," Elmer growled bitterly, "to be so cocksure everything good under the sun is the result of your own goodness."

"I don't feel that way at all," corrected Elsie. "I feel it's Borden care and Borden skill that make everything that's Borden's so good. I don't happen to have anything to do with Borden's None Such Mince Meat."

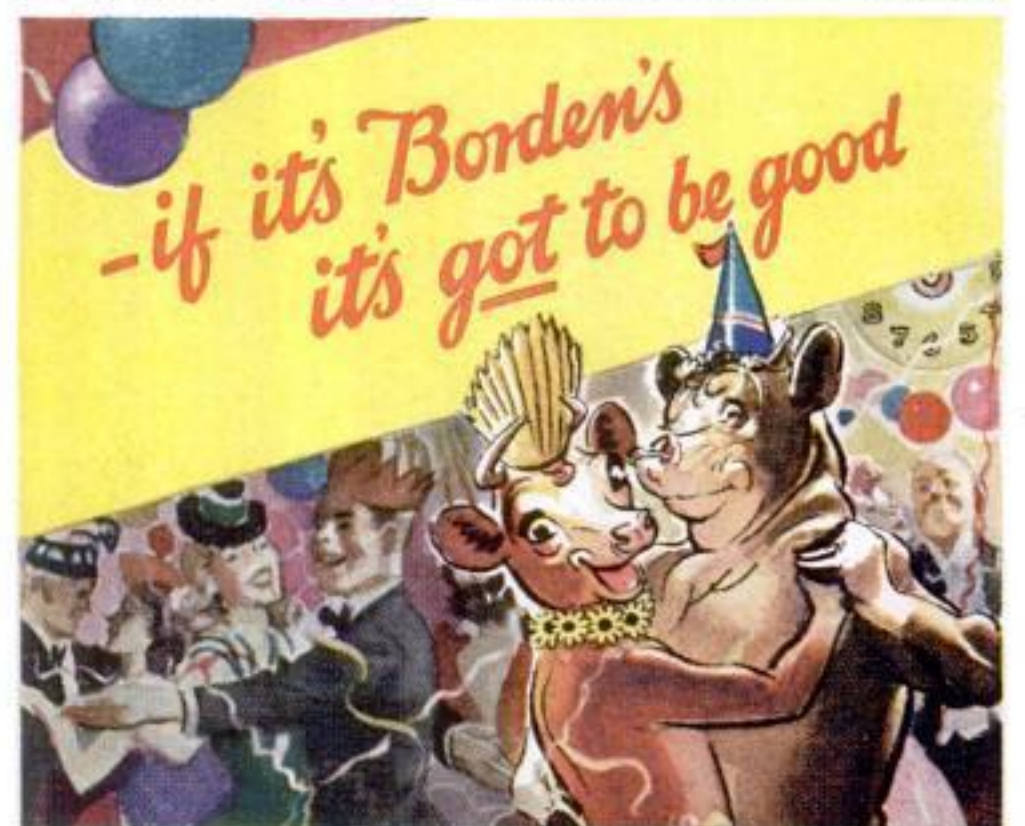

But no one ever tasted more juicy, spicy mince pies than None Such makes. . . Now, Elmer, won't you sign your New Year's resolutions—right here?"

"NO!" bellowed Elmer. "I refuse to be led by the nose! I refuse to be bulldozed!"

"You're being bull-headed," Elsie told him. "It's by being reasonable and listening to others and taking good advice that millions of people have learned to their joy . . . if it's Borden's, it's GOT to be good!"

PAN AMERICAN AIRWAYS BUILDS A DOZEN FOR U. S. COMMAND OF SOUTH ATLANTIC

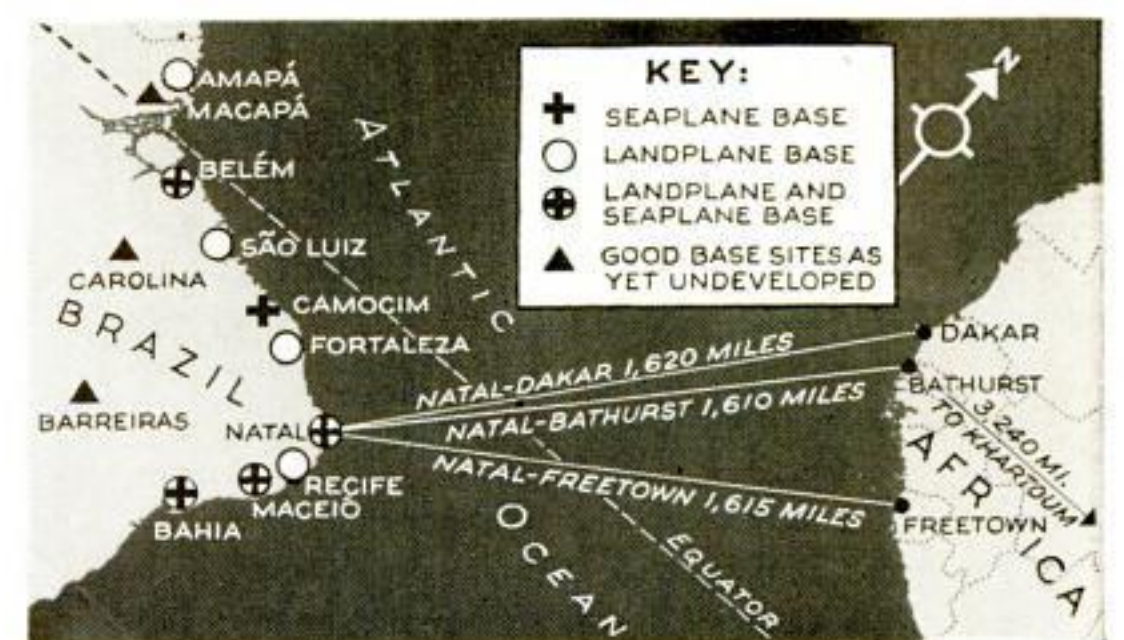

ITALIAN COASTAL COMMERCIAL PLANE, FROM FIELD NEXT DOOR, FLIES OVER U. S. FIELD. ITALIAN TRANSATLANTIC PLANE IS THE LAST DIRECT SOUTH AMERICAN LINK TO AXIS

From London last week came official announcement that U. S.-built bombers were flying to the front in Libya via the South Atlantic short cut, from Natal on the hump of Brazil to Bathurst on the hump of Africa. This aerial tightening of Hitler's southern flank was first enforced in August, when President Roosevelt commissioned Pan American Airways to ferry the planes and build necessary bases. Less well publicized is the fact that Pan American's bases program goes far beyond the needs of the ferry service. Involving development of a full dozen land and land-sea airports (see map), it will make the hump of Brazil a site for major operations commanding the South Atlantic.

In line with its function as an unofficial arm of the U. S. Government in South America, Pan American Airways has had this broad project in the works for more than a year. With surveys ready, work begun in August is now nearing completion on at least half the fields. As shown in pictures here, work proceeds under peculiarly Latin-American circumstances. It is performed almost exclusively by hand labor under the interested eyes of Axis agents, attached to German and Italian consulates and to the German and Italian airlines that still web the South American continent.

Beneath Our Christmas Tree

Every year on Christmas Eve since
I was just a lad,
We've put a package 'neath our tree—and marked it: "Love—to Dad."
Just a pound of Edgeworth—though the cost is really small
Of all the gifts that father gets he likes it best of all.

Now later on when I grew up, that famous tin of blue
Appeared beneath our Christmas tree—
but this time there were two,
For I had learned, from watching dad, the joy a pipe can bring.
And trial and error taught me, too, that Edgeworth was the thing.

Again this year, I'm proud to say,
beneath our Christmas tree,
We're putting gifts of Edgeworth, yes,
but this time there'll be three.
For my son has grown to manhood
now, and much to my delight,
He wants a pipe for Christmas and I'm going to start him right.

Edgeworth is on sale at your dealer's in an attractive log cabin
Christmas wrapping.

Brazilian laborers hack away the grade for the runways of the new land-sea base at Maceio. They work willingly, if slowly, for a pay scale beginning at 30¢ a day for a 48-hour week. The cheapness of labor weighed against transport of U.S. earth-moving machines.

Radio house for base at Natal rises from the ground. Overlooking Natal sea base is tower of German Condor airline's powerful radio.

Yankee Clipper rides at anchor off seaplane pier at Natal. On the way to Africa, it carries personnel for the operation of the new line.

Hand-operated dump trucks, wangled from a German contractor, empty their load at edge of field at Recife. Operations here will double length of the runways, moving 120,000 cu. yd. of earth. On sandy ground, the runways will be foot-thick layers of clay and macadam.

An old, old Christmas Legend

According to an old, old legend told for many years in many lands—one cold and stilly night, an Angel of the Lord appeared in the sky with tidings of the birth of our Saviour.

The shepherds left their flocks and hastened over the hills to Bethlehem to worship the Child and bring Him gifts.

A little shepherdess and her playmate followed the throng. When they came to the stable, they gazed with wonder upon the Child, but did not dare enter.

"We have no gift," sobbed the little girl, "so we cannot go in. I wish I had but a flower to give Him."

An Angel happened to see her tears, and swept his staff over the snow at her feet. And from the bare earth sprang the fairest roses that ever bloomed.

"Nor gold, nor frankincense, nor myrrh," said the Angel, "could please the Christ Child more than these lovely roses."

Smiling through her tears, the little shepherdess gathered the flowers—the gift of love that her heart had longed for.

Always, flowers have been the gift of the heart—bearing a message of love and glad wishes, sweetly and sincerely told.

THE COLOR CAMERA CATCHES A BELLY-DIVING LEOPARD FROG JUST AS THE WATER IS CLOSING IN OVER IT. THE FROG LOOKS FIERCE BUT IT REALLY IS FRIGHTENED

A JUMPING FROG

THE SAD PLIGHT OF THIS LEAPING AMPHIBIAN IS SYMBOLIZED BY A GREAT COLOR PHOTOGRAPH

This stop-action color photograph, which was taken by Gjon Mili with his stroboscopic camera, is not only a great picture of a frog jumping into the water. It is also a symbol of the frog's amphibian plight, a reminder of the tragic flaw which evolution left in frogs.

The frog, a member of the vertebrate class called Batrachia, is the evolutionary link between water animals and land animals. It was the first animal that adapted itself to life on land. From some long-lost batrachian cousin of the frog evolved the higher forms of land life. But the frog remained half land-creature, half water-creature—able to live in both places, yet entirely able to subsist in neither. The frog cannot stay in water all the time because it must get out to get enough food. It cannot stay safely on land because it is there beset by too many dangers. The frog's only protection against danger is to jump into the water. It spends a lot of its life jumping. Every time it does it is paying for the temerity which some pioneer ancestor showed in crawling out of the water to live on land.

For shallow dives the frog usually lands plop on its belly, like the frog above, which was photographed at the now-closed New York Aquarium. For deep dives, it goes in headfirst. A versatile jumper, the frog sometimes flip-flops and lands on its back. By this time of the year, most U. S. frogs have stopped jumping. They are squatting quietly underneath the water, their breathing almost stopped and their hearts beating very very slowly as they hibernate through the cold winter.

WHEN PATRICIA LOOKED HER REAL AGE, 16, SHE GOT THE "JUNIOR MISS" JOB

SCHOOLGIRL WALKS INTO THEATER AND COMES OUT WITH LEAD IN HIT SHOW

How Patricia Peardon became the Broadway season's loveliest new discovery is in itself a little comedy of errors. It happened in this manner. Patricia (on cover) is 16 years old and lives with her parents in upper east-side Manhattan. Practically all her life she has wanted to be an actress. Once she went on a brief road tour in a play with Katharine Hepburn and on occasion, over radio's March of Time, she used to impersonate Snow White, Princess Elizabeth or Stalin's daughter.

But to be on Broadway—that was something else.

Last October a friend advised her to apply to Moss Hart for casting in Junior Miss, a comedy about adolescence. To impress Mr. Hart with her Broadway sophistication, Patricia put on high heels and all the jewelry she could muster, piled her hair on top of her head and shadowed her eyelids. What happened when she marched into the theater for a reading is shown in these pictures, subsequently re-enacted for LIFE.

Patricia read the script for Director Moss Hart and the authors. Then she stood trembling while they went into a huddle.

"Take that make-up off," said Hart and Patricia admitted she was only 16. Then she let her hair down and read again.

Patricia broke news of her success to father that night. He is Lieutenant Commander R. C. Peardon of the Navy Air Force.

Moss Hart showed her how to act a scene during rehearsals. Patricia got the lead role of adolescent Judy Graves, taken from the New Yorker stories by Sally Benson.

Here is the same scene as Patricia now acts it. The doll is a present from Judy's father's boss. When Judy first sees it, she exclaims: "A doll! For me? He's screwy!"

Judy does yoga exercises to clear her head for action after seeing her father kiss the boss's daughter. Behind is her squeaky-voiced pal, Fuffy Adams (Lenore Lonergan).

"You're very scientific, aren't you?" admires Judy when her caller cures her of hiccups by whacking her over the skull with a magazine. He modestly replies: "Sort of."

PRISON SHIP

NAZI CENSOR RELEASES

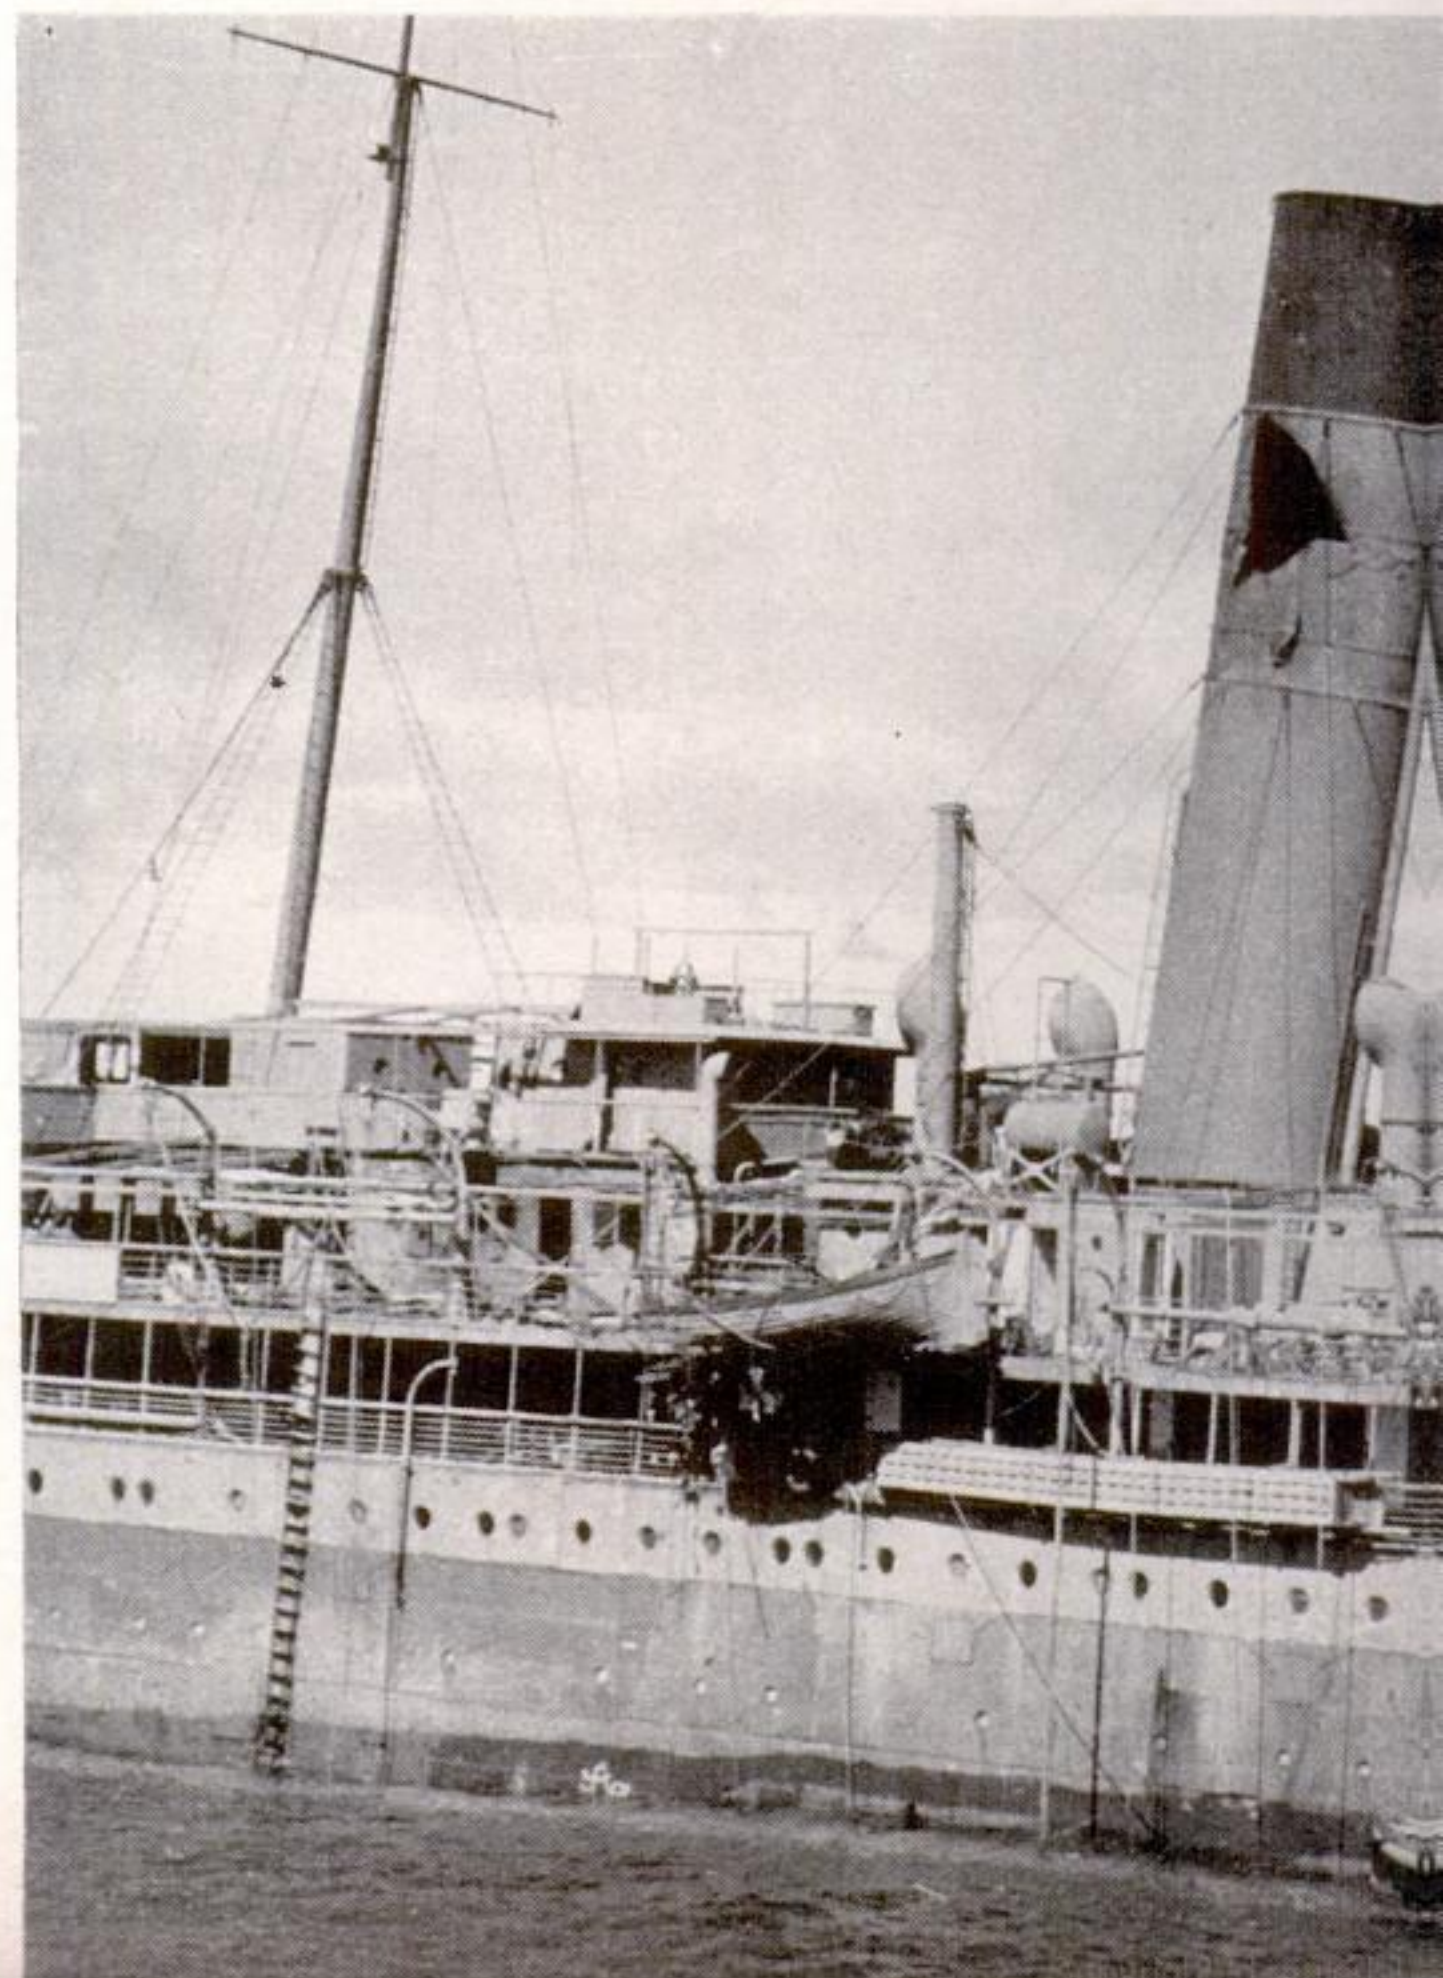

LIFE'S ZAMZAM PICTURES

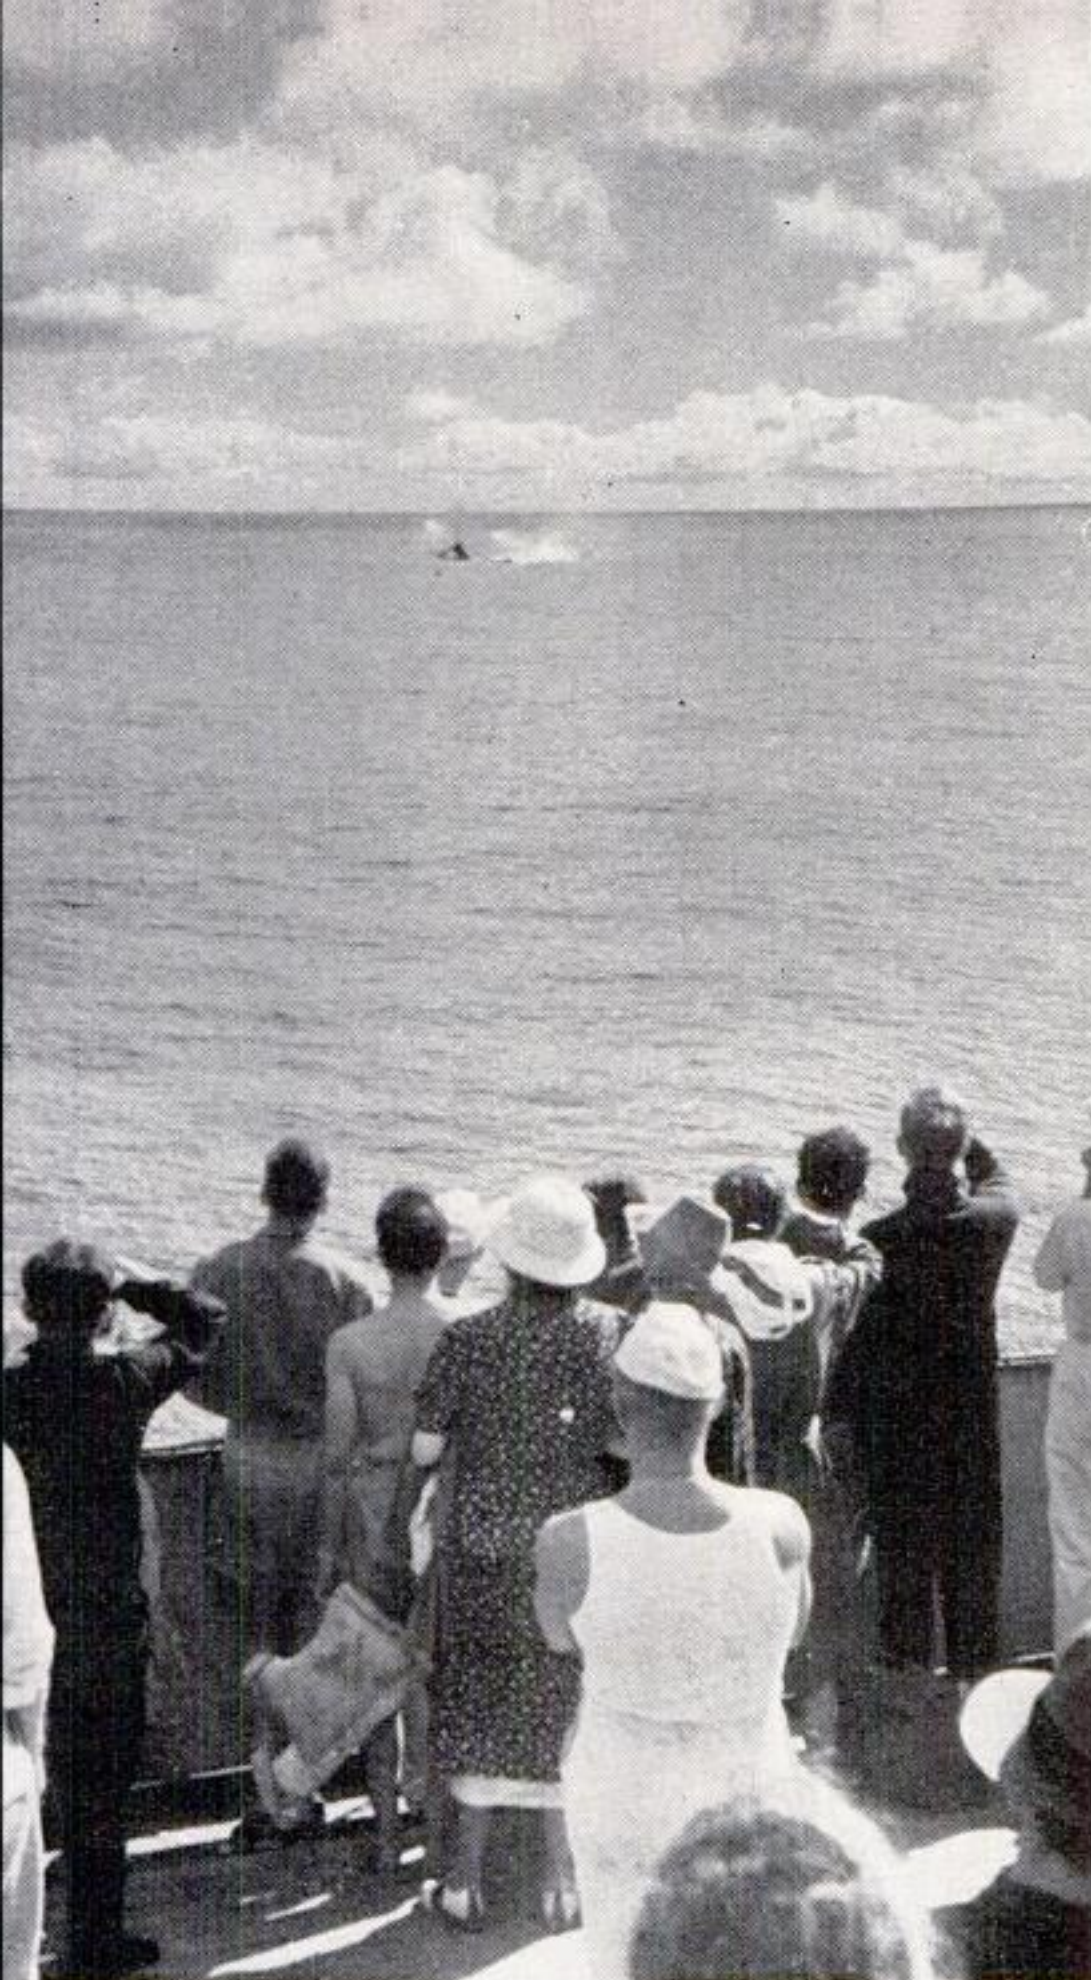

After dreadful experience of getting pretty wife and two babies through shelling of Zamzam, into lifeboats and onto the German raider, Belgian Engineer Uyttendaele is weak and shaken. He ended in Nazi prison.

The six pictures above show the progressive sinking of the Egyptian liner Zamzam by the German raider Tamessis in the South Atlantic on April 17. This international episode, the first to give 138 American men, women and children a bitter taste of Nazi captivity, was recorded by LIFE Photographer David E. Scherman, a Zamzam passenger who, with his fellow-travelers, was first transferred to the Tamessis and later to the German cruise ship Dresden for the perilous 33-day trip back to Occupied France.

There the Nazi authorities confiscated what they thought was all of Scherman's exposed film—some 1,500 pictures. They said they were sending it to the Propaganda Ministry in Berlin to be censored. When Scherman arrived back in New York in

Of 55 high-explosive shells fired by the Nazi raider at the Zamzam without warning, worst damage was done on port side amidships. First hit took away aerial. Three men

June, he produced six rolls of film which he had smuggled past the Nazis and which LIFE used to illustrate Fortune Editor Charles J. V. Murphy's personal story of this historic event in its June 23 issue. Neither Scherman nor LIFE ever expected to see any of the film that went to Berlin.

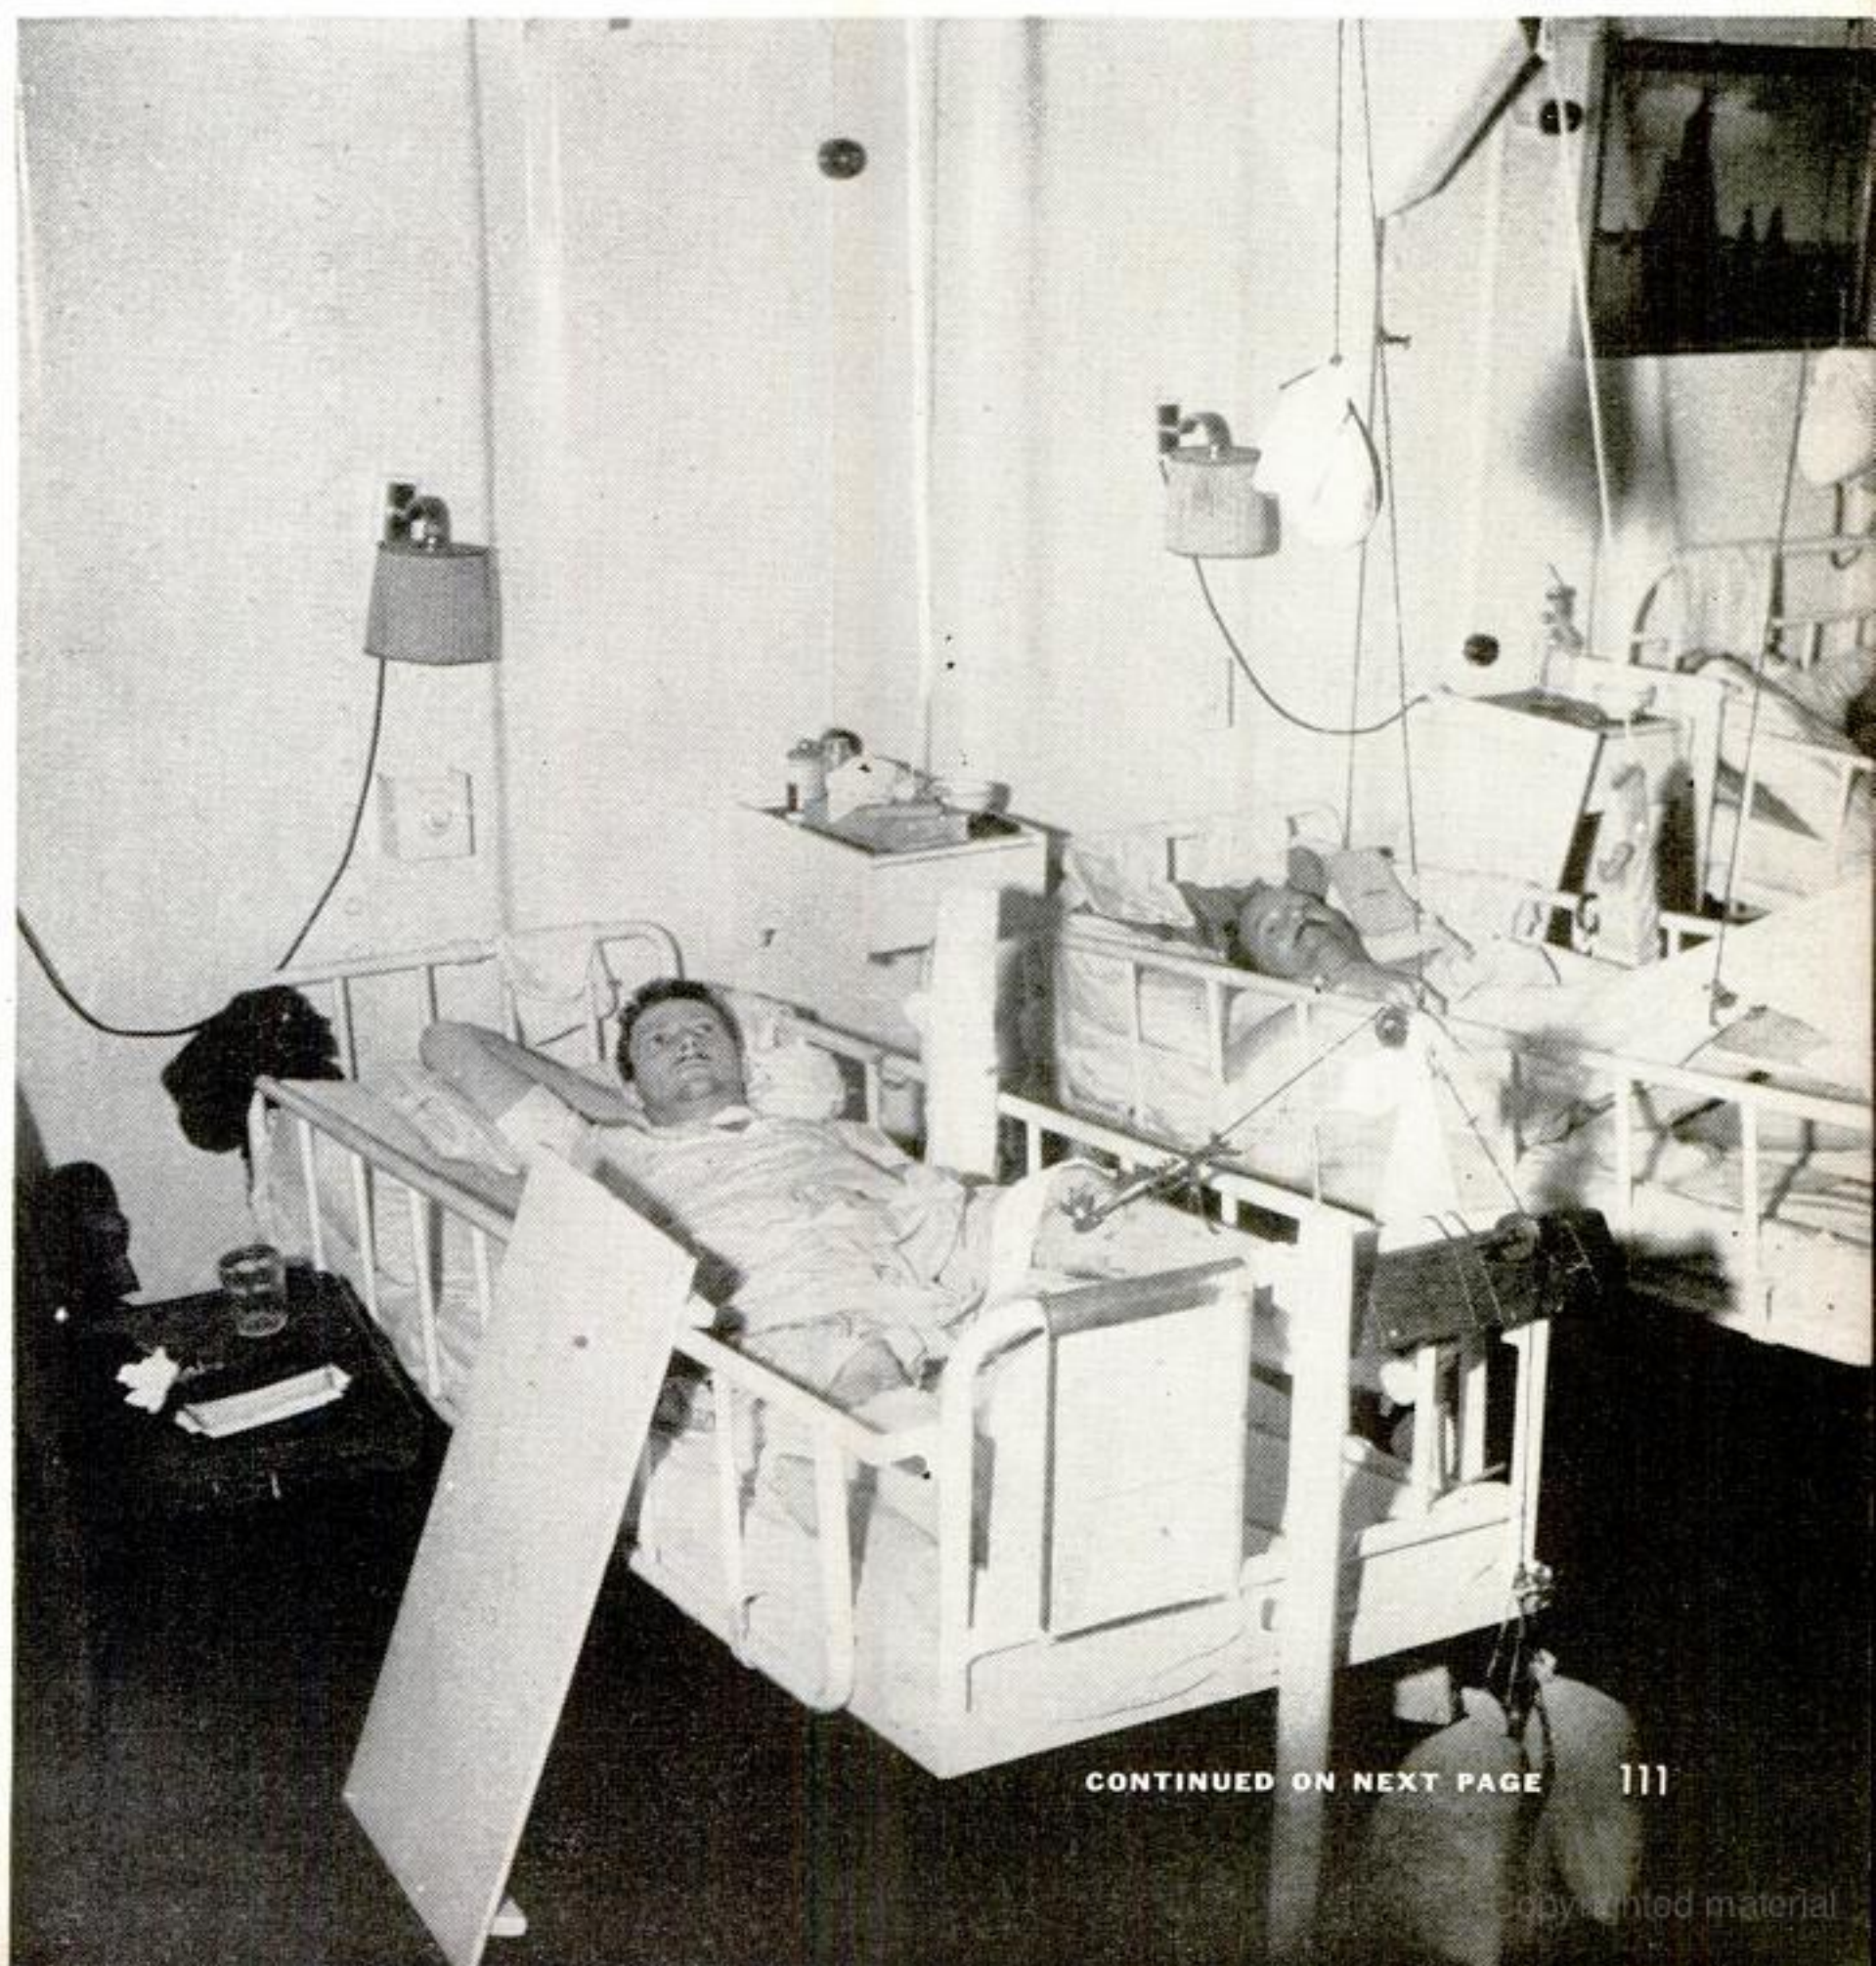

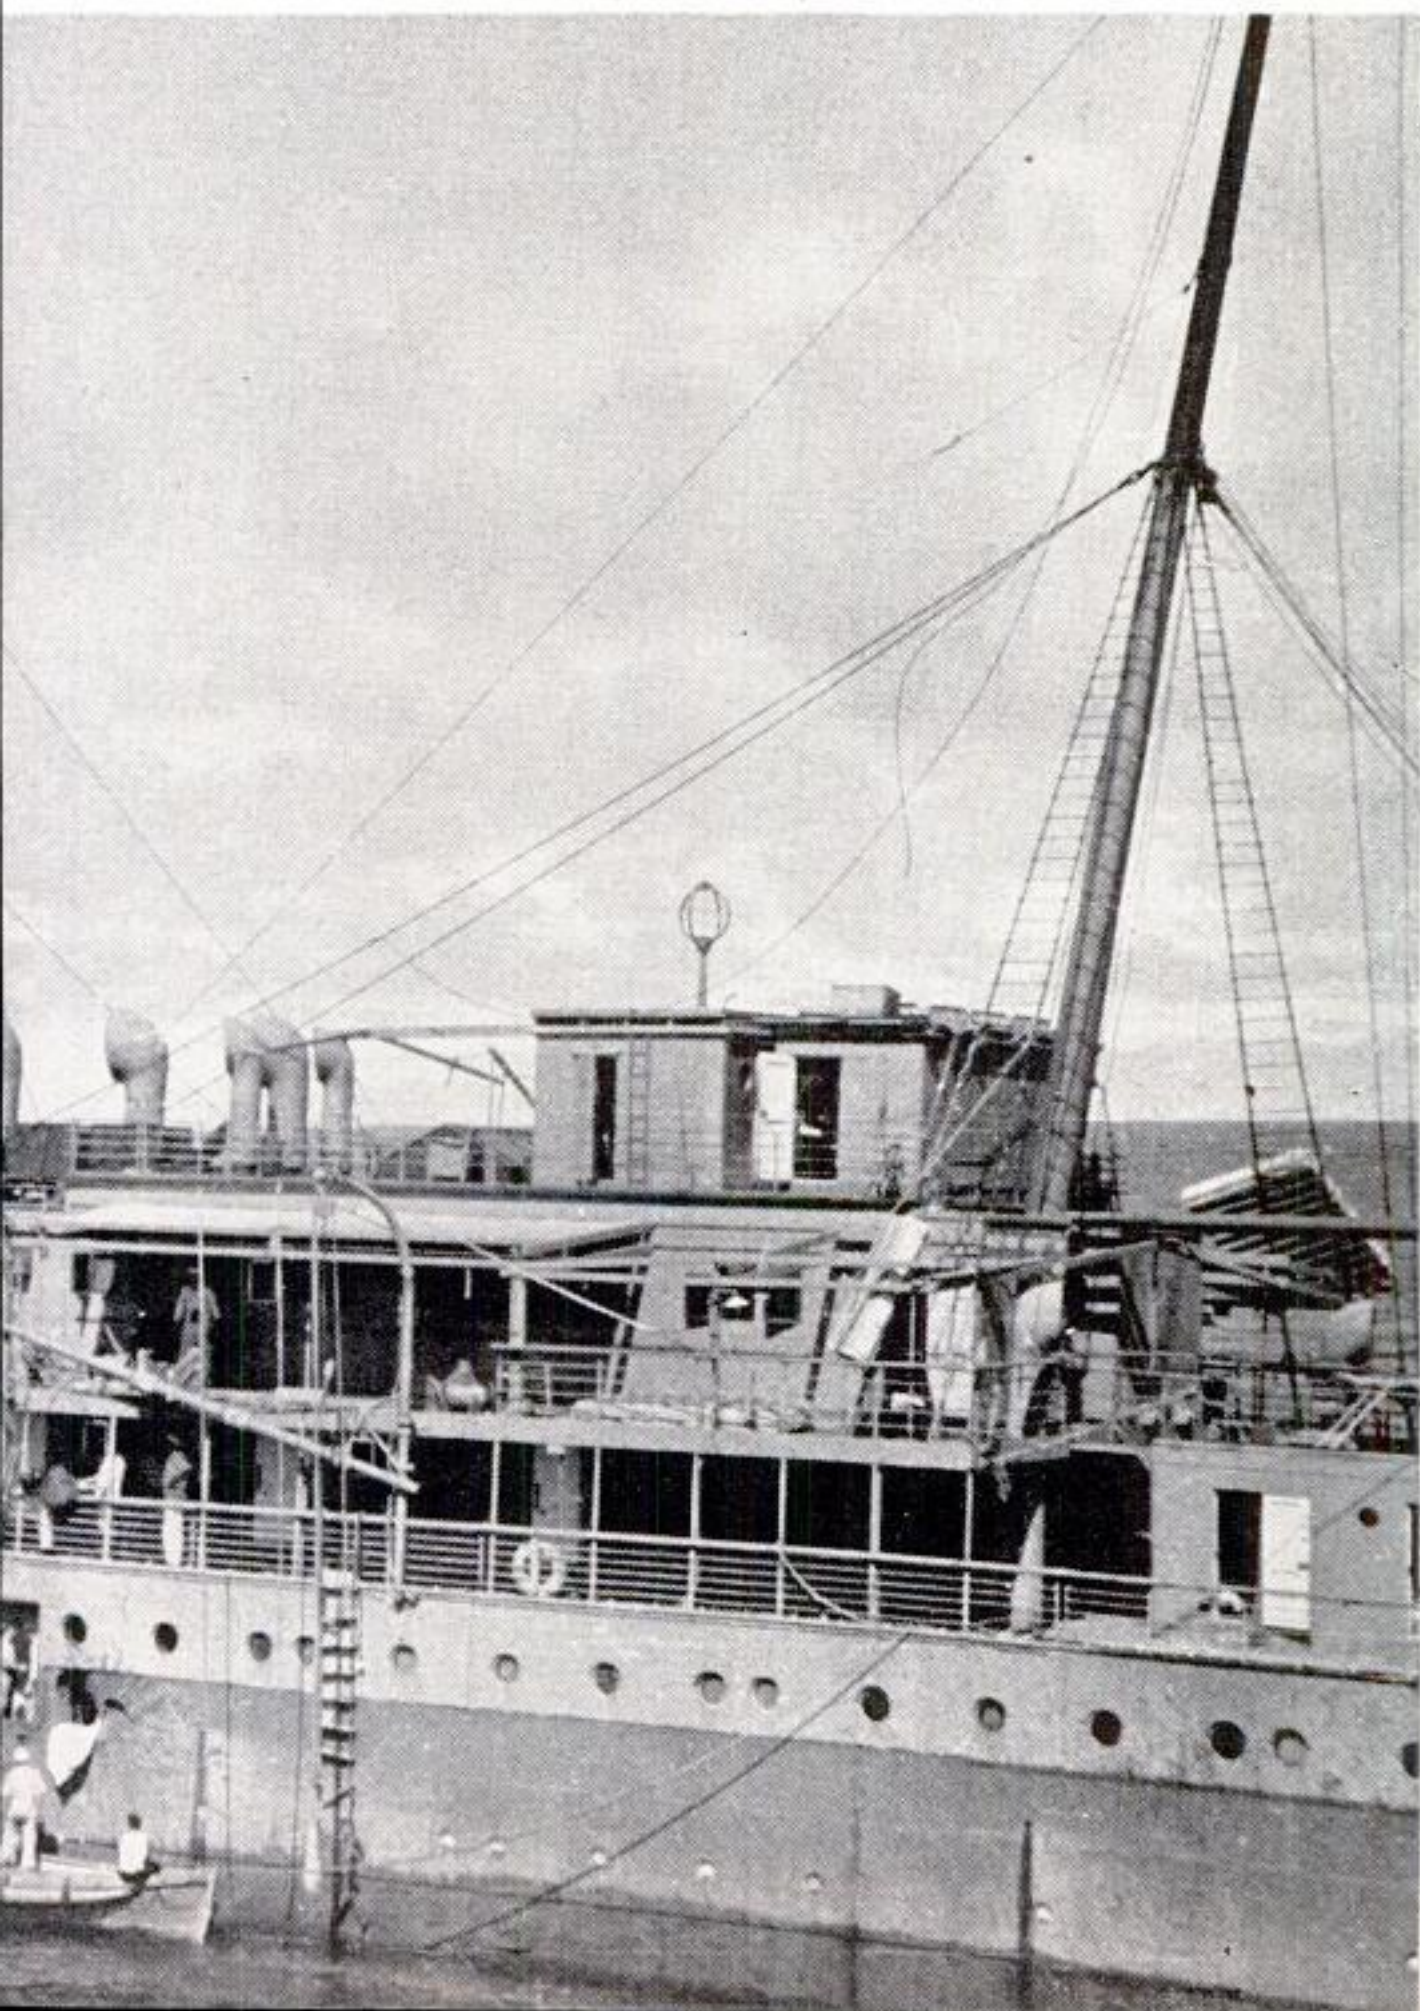

Last week there arrived at the U. S. State Department in Washington 800 of Scherman's negatives from Berlin. LIFE herewith prints eight pages of these pictures as a notable documentation of a notable event in the war. For reasons of its own the German Propaganda Ministry is now ready to let the world see how the 328 Zamzam survivors lived and ate and slept and prayed and worked on the Dres- den, with all the accompanying dirt and degradation and distress of body and soul.

The picture below shows for the first time the damage to the Zamzam after its ten-minute dawn shelling without warning or inquiry. At 2 p. m. that day the Germans put three time bombs aboard the hulk and she went down in ten minutes, Scherman photographing her end from the deck of the Tamesis (above). All passenger-prisoners were transferred to the Dresden, except the three wounded men shown at right below in the hospital ward of the Nazi raider. Then the Tamesis sailed off and now, eight months later, has mysteriously vanished from the South Atlantic with her three wounded prisoners. Even the Germans say they have not heard from her for months.

at right were wounded by explosions under smashed lifeboat and beside door above German motorboat. Germans are taking off baggage, provisions, liquor, as hold slowly fills.

127 MEN LIVED FOR 33 DAYS FROM SUNSET TO SUNUP IN HATCH NO. 2 OF "DRESDEN"

LIFE ON "DRESDEN" WAS HARD, DIRTY, DEGRADING

The picture on the opposite page looks like a grim movie set of a concentration camp. It is, in fact, the hold of the German cruise ship, Dresden, in which all the white males of the sunken Zamzam spent all the dark hours of 33 days, on their roundabout trip to solid land in Occupied France. The characters in this setting make a conglomerate cast. The biggest group consists of missionaries of 18 different Protestant sects, righteous, spare-living men who had set out to preach the Word among the blacks of South Africa. There are adventure-seeking young Americans of good family who had volunteered to drive ambulances for the Free French in Africa. Most of them are gathered against the far wall. There are French-Canadian priests destined for Basutoland. There are tobacco buyers from the Carolinas. All four of these groups remained to the end largely separate and unified. But under the leadership of an outsider, Fortune Editor Murphy, they worked together to survive.

Consideration for their comfort was expressed by the German captain in a minimum of deeds, a maximum of polite promises. Men, women and children were fed on a swill of rice and small pieces of meat, a flour paste, bread without butter, weak tea, while the German crew ate ham and eggs, beef, potato salad, oranges, coffee, hot rolls, far better than they ate in Germany. The captive women lived fairly decently, five to nine to a small passenger cabin.

The men in Hatch No. 2 had but one companionway for 127 men, a dangerous exit in case of sinking. They thereupon built two supplementary ladders (right). They also made a latrine, benches, table, altar, shower bath, policed and cleaned their own quarters. Nearly all of them got dysentery, diarrhea, constipation. But one comfort was the clandestine figuring of the ship's position by old Dr. De Graaff Hunter, once chief of the Survey of India (bottom, right), who had a table of tangents and took the sun's shadow with his pencil.

Homesickness affects mattress manufacturer, F. E. Conboy, of Westfield, N. J. He was on the way to Johannesburg, South Africa to make tufted-satin

On Hatch No. 2, men loaf during day beside the privy (right). This tropical part of trip north of Equator was pleasantest, though deck sometimes got too hot for bare feet, nights were sweltering. Chief danger was sunstroke.

MISSIONARIES AND PRIESTS LED PRAYERS

To the dismay of the Nazis, their Zamzam captives were mainly men and women of God. These included 17 Catholic priests from Quebec, led by splendid Father Saloman G. Paquet, and 90 Protestant missionaries with 29 small children. At 6 and at 8 every weekday morning, these two groups held separate all-male services (above and below). On Sundays, the women were allowed to attend the services conducted on the afterdeck. The priests laughed together and recited their breviaries, the missionaries read and argued their Bibles, but the top theologian aboard was a British Negro, the Reverend Oluwah Dosumu, holder of a master's degree from Columbia, on his way to preach in Liberia. At first the hymn-singing annoyed the other passengers, but eventually it helped to buck them up. The priests were imprisoned by Nazis.

GUNSTON HALL

GEORGE MASON, FATHER OF THE 150-YEAR-OLD BILL OF RIGHTS, LIVED IN ONE OF VIRGINIA'S GREAT HOUSES

GEORGE MASON IV

On Dec. 15, 1791, the Virginia legislature completed national ratification of the first ten amendments to the young U. S. Constitution—the amendments that are now universally known as the Bill of Rights. This week President Roosevelt, Charles Evans Hughes, Actress Helen Hayes and other notables join in celebrating the 150th Anniversary of that event. But nowhere will the celebration be more heartfelt or appropriate than in the fine old plantation home pictured below.

This is Gunston Hall on the Potomac nine miles below Mt. Vernon, built between 1755 and 1758 by the fourth George Mason of Virginia. George Mason was the neighbor and intimate friend of Washington, the colleague of Jefferson. He drafted the first Constitution of Virginia. And in 1776 he wrote for Virginia a 14-point "Declaration of Rights" which was the model for other States and for the Federal Bill of Rights.

Most Americans know, or should know, that the Bill of Rights guarantees to them freedom of religion, freedom of speech and the press, freedom to assemble peaceably and petition their government "for a redress of grievances." All of this is in Amendment I. The second provides that each State can have a militia and affirms "the right of the people to keep and bear arms." The third strictly regulates the quartering of Federal troops in private homes. The fourth prohibits "unreasonable searches and seizures," requires that warrants can only be issued "upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation." The fifth requires grand jury action for serious criminal charges, provides that accused persons cannot be "put in jeopardy" twice for the same offense, cannot be forced to testify against themselves in criminal cases, and cannot "be deprived of life, liberty or property, without due process of law." The sixth and seventh safeguard the historic right of trial by jury. The eighth prohibits excessive bail or fines, or "cruel and unusual punishments." The ninth says that the listing of such rights in the Constitution does not "deny or disparage other rights retained by the people." The tenth reserves to the States, or to the people, all powers not given to the Federal Government, or not specifically barred to the States. These ten amendments are as broad a charter of individual liberties as was ever written into a nation's fundamental law.

Historians and novelists who like to show the leaders of Revolutionary America as a radical rabble had better overlook aristocratic George Mason. He inherited one great estate and married another, becoming one of the richest men in the colonies. He owned 15,000 acres of choice Potomac lands, 60,000 more acres in Kentucky, a share of 600,000 more in the Northwest Territory. In his family were early governors of Michigan and California. His grandson was the Confederate commissioner to England.

Mason hated political noise and argument. While he was a Virginia burgess in 1775, he wrote George Washington: "I never was in so disagreeable a situation and almost despaired of a cause which I saw so ill conducted. . . . Mere vexation and disgust threw me into such an ill state of health, that before the Convention rose, I was sometimes near fainting in the House. . . ." But in quiet discussions, and particularly when he sat down to write in his peaceful study at Gunston Hall, Mason was a powerful pleader for liberty. It was presumably in that study, with its plain white woodwork and simple fireplace (see p. 120), that he wrote the Declaration of Rights. And it was at Gunston Hall that he died, in 1792, and was buried in the family plot.

In the 1860's Gunston Hall passed from the Mason family. By 1912 it had become a lumber camp. Two Negro families and two white families lived in the house, and mules were stabled in the cellar. That year it was purchased by Louis Hertle, a retired Chicago merchant (Marshall Field & Co.) who has spent 30 years and a medium-sized fortune to restore its beauty. These photographs, by LIFE Photographer Alfred Eisenstaedt, show how Gunston Hall looks today.

Gunston Hall is a superb example of colonial architecture. Owner Hertle is particularly proud of this goldfish pond. He located it where the house is reflected in its surface on fine, windless days. Many flowers unknown to George Mason now grow in his garden. Says Hertle: "Mason was a sensible man and if he saw a new and beautiful flower he would have it in his garden."

Carved stone fountain with figure is copy of famous baroque piece. Owner Hertle imported it for Gunston Hall's restored gardens, which he says remind him of years he lived on Riviera.

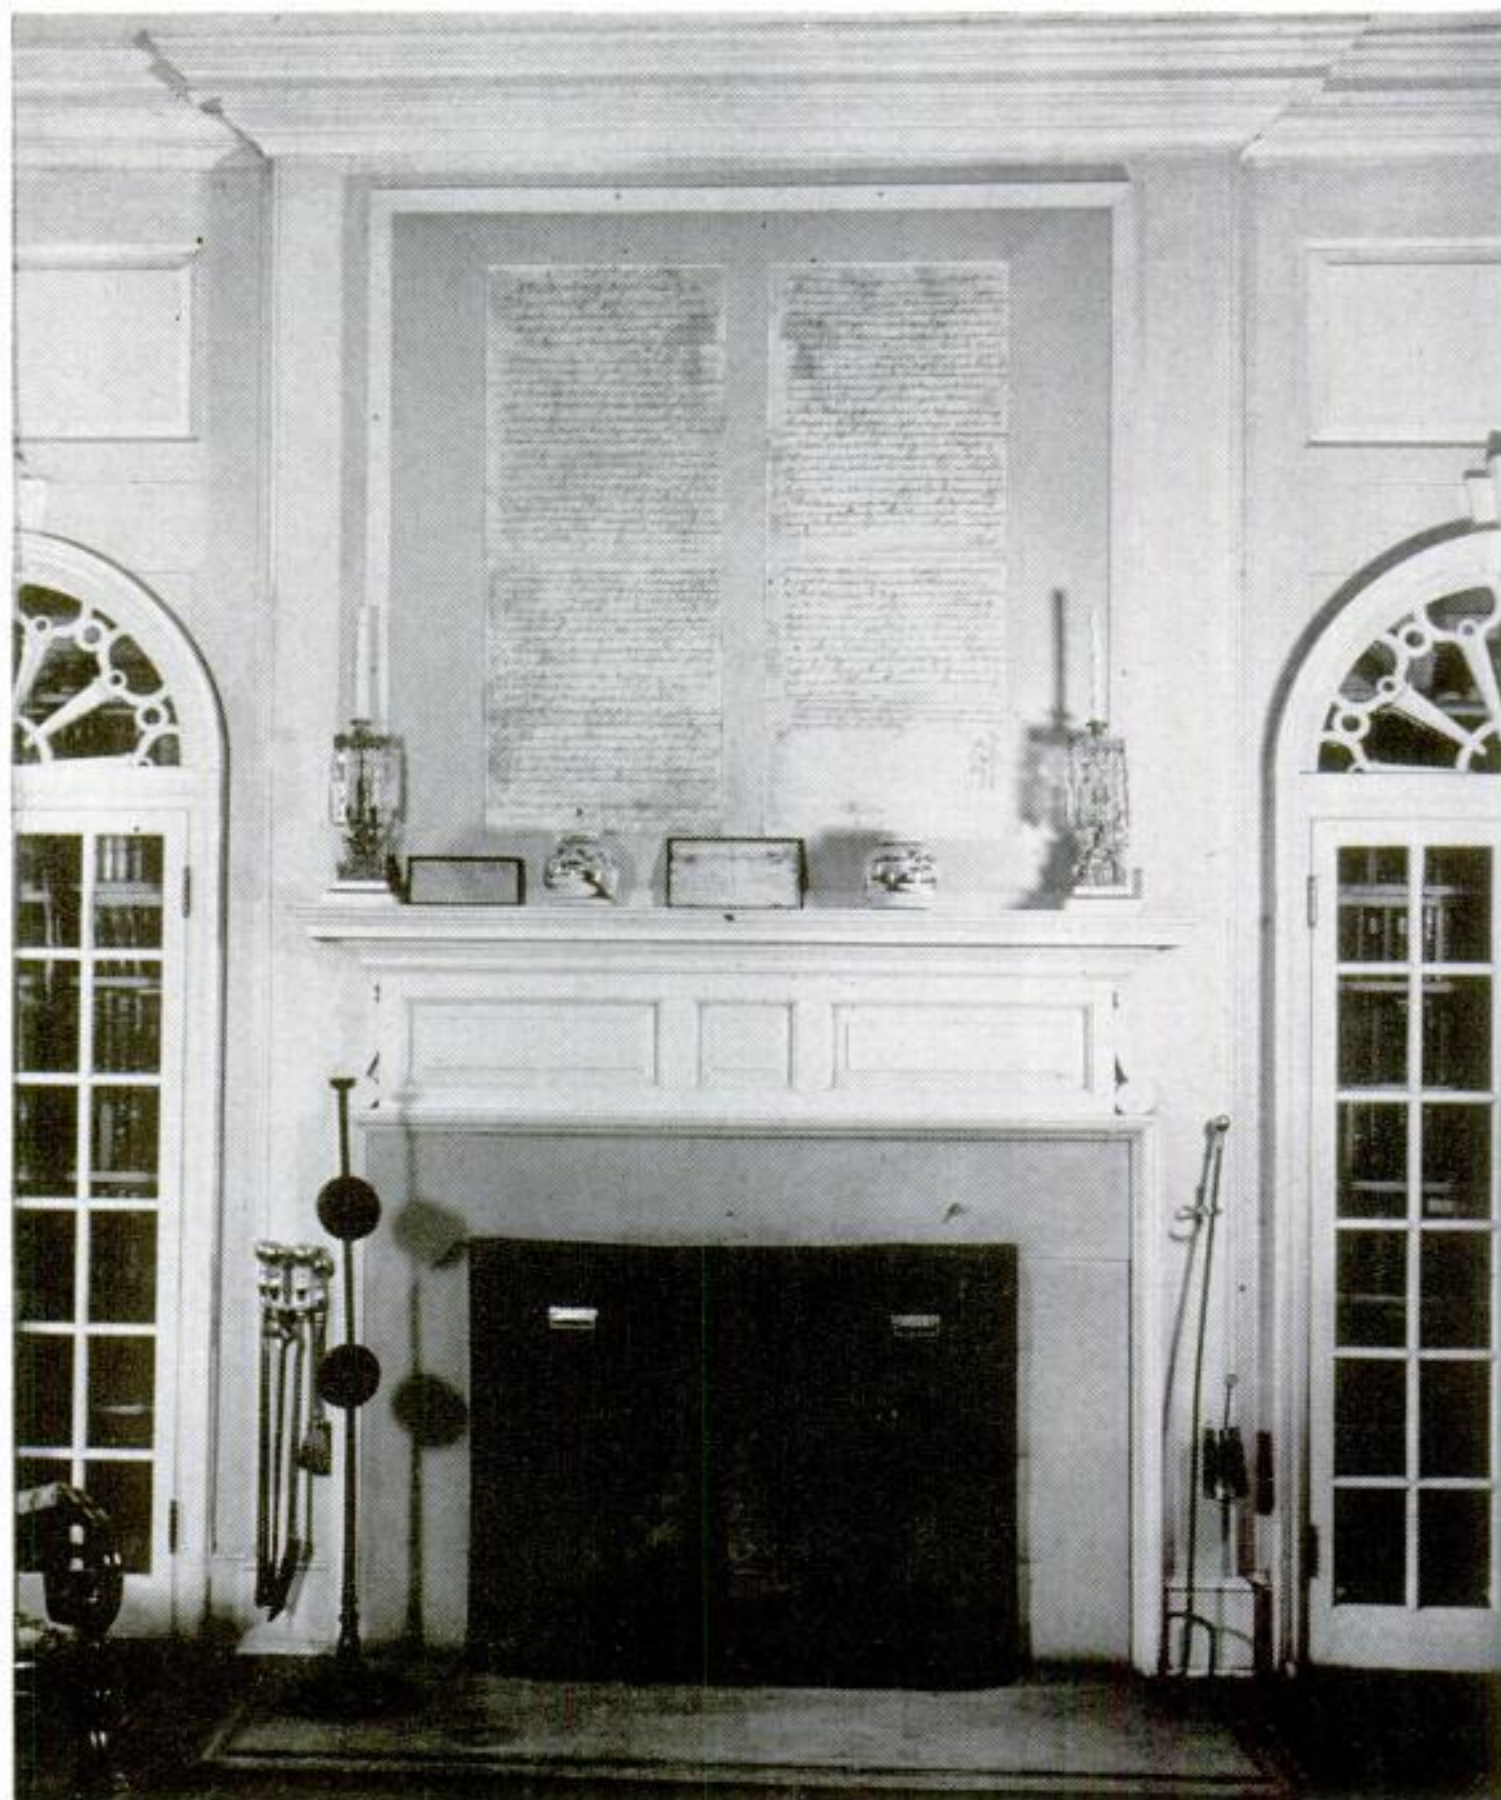

This fine well, one of four at Gunston Hall, is near spot where George Mason's outdoor kitchen used to be. It has an electric pump. Hertle built the portico and put bucket there for show.

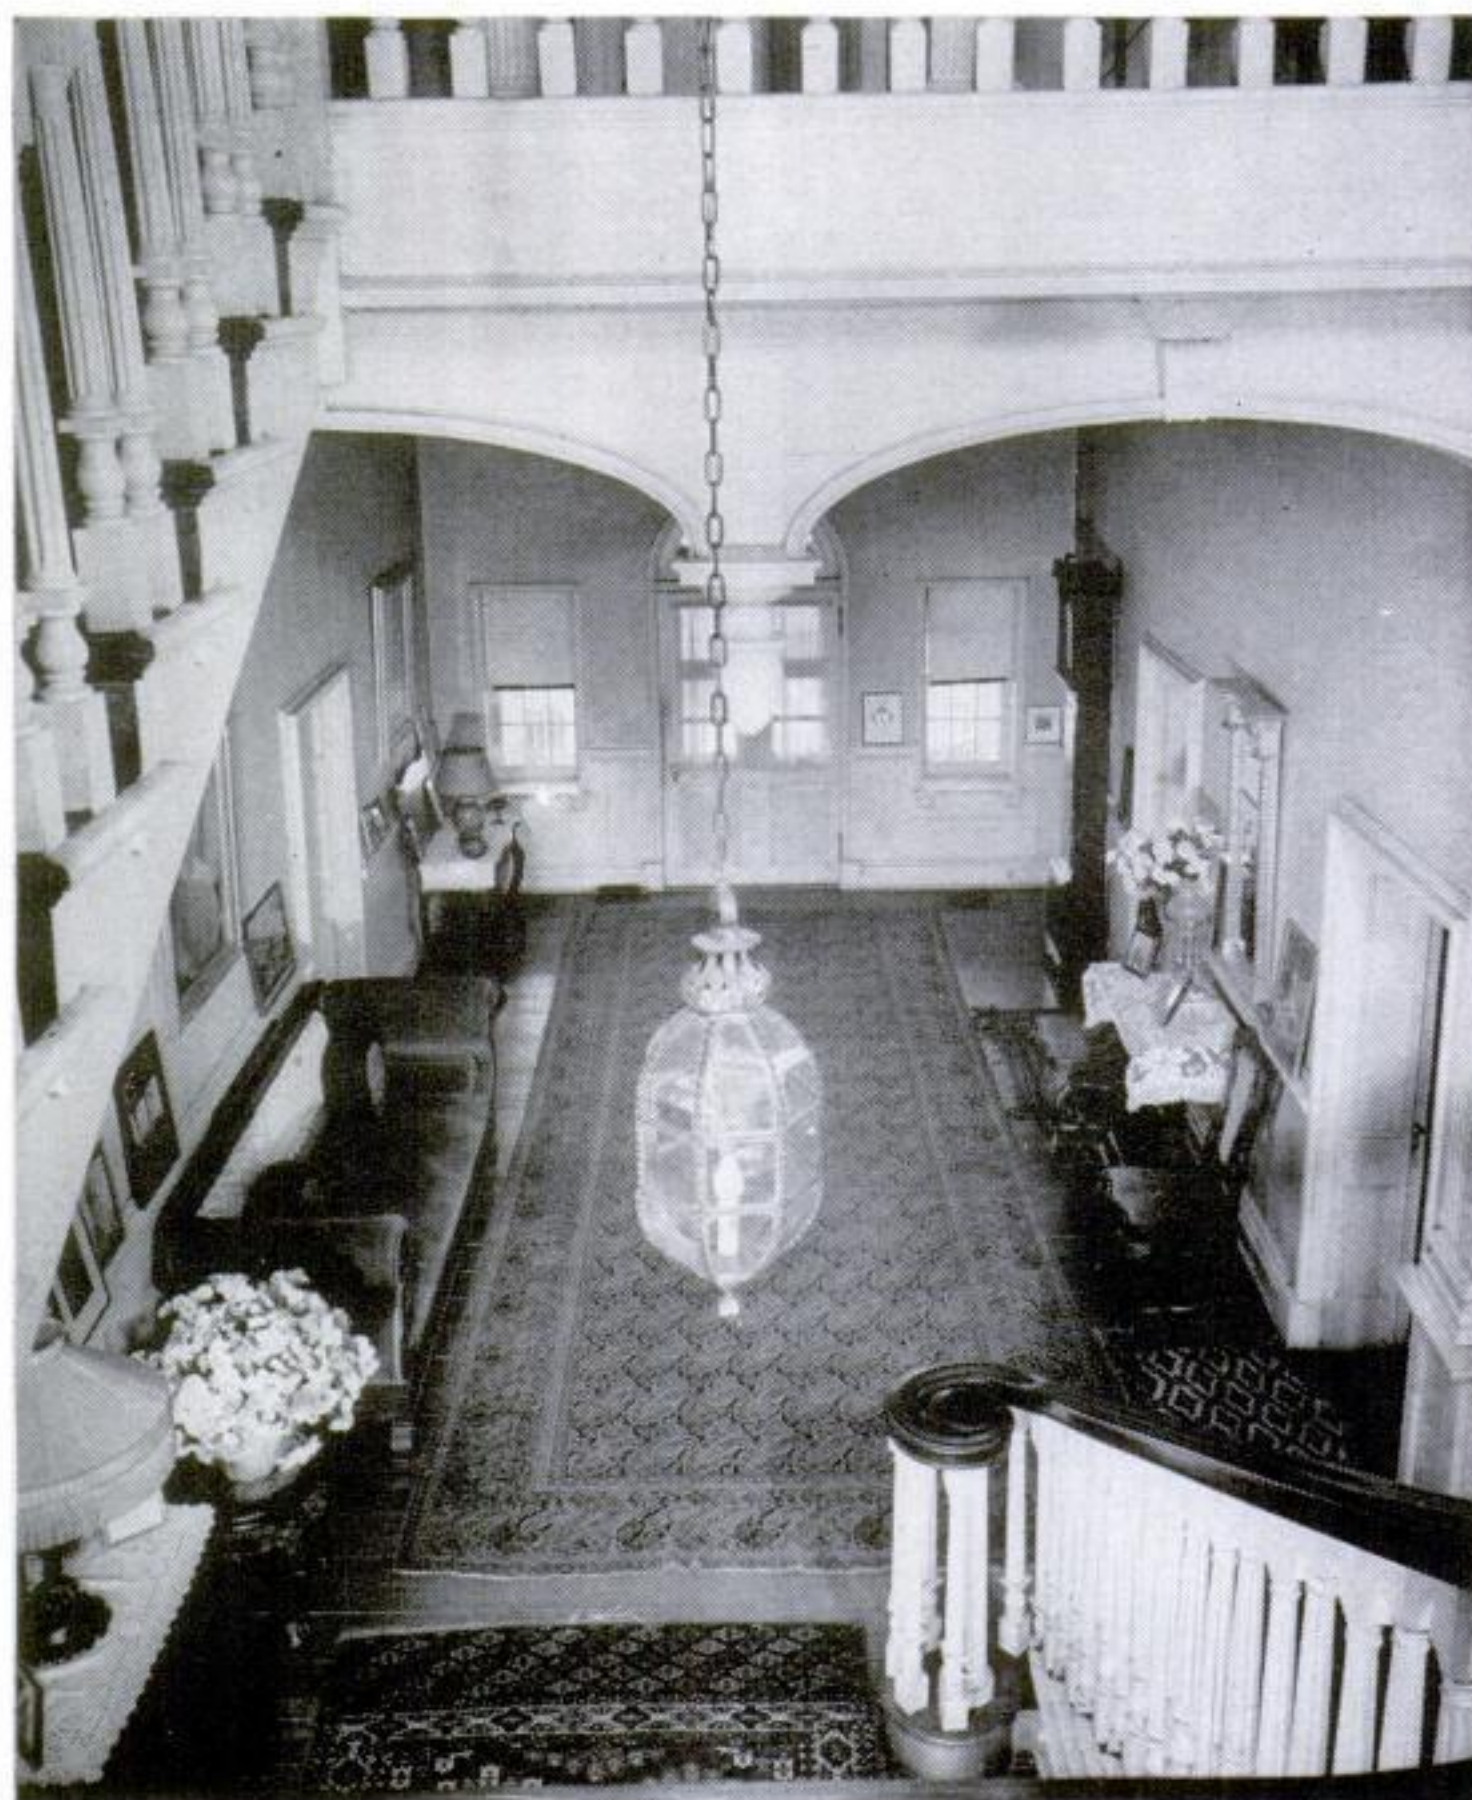

Mason family burial plot lies west of the house, shaded by red oaks and gnarled old cedars. Hertle built the brick wall. The granite shaft, marking approximate grave of George Mason

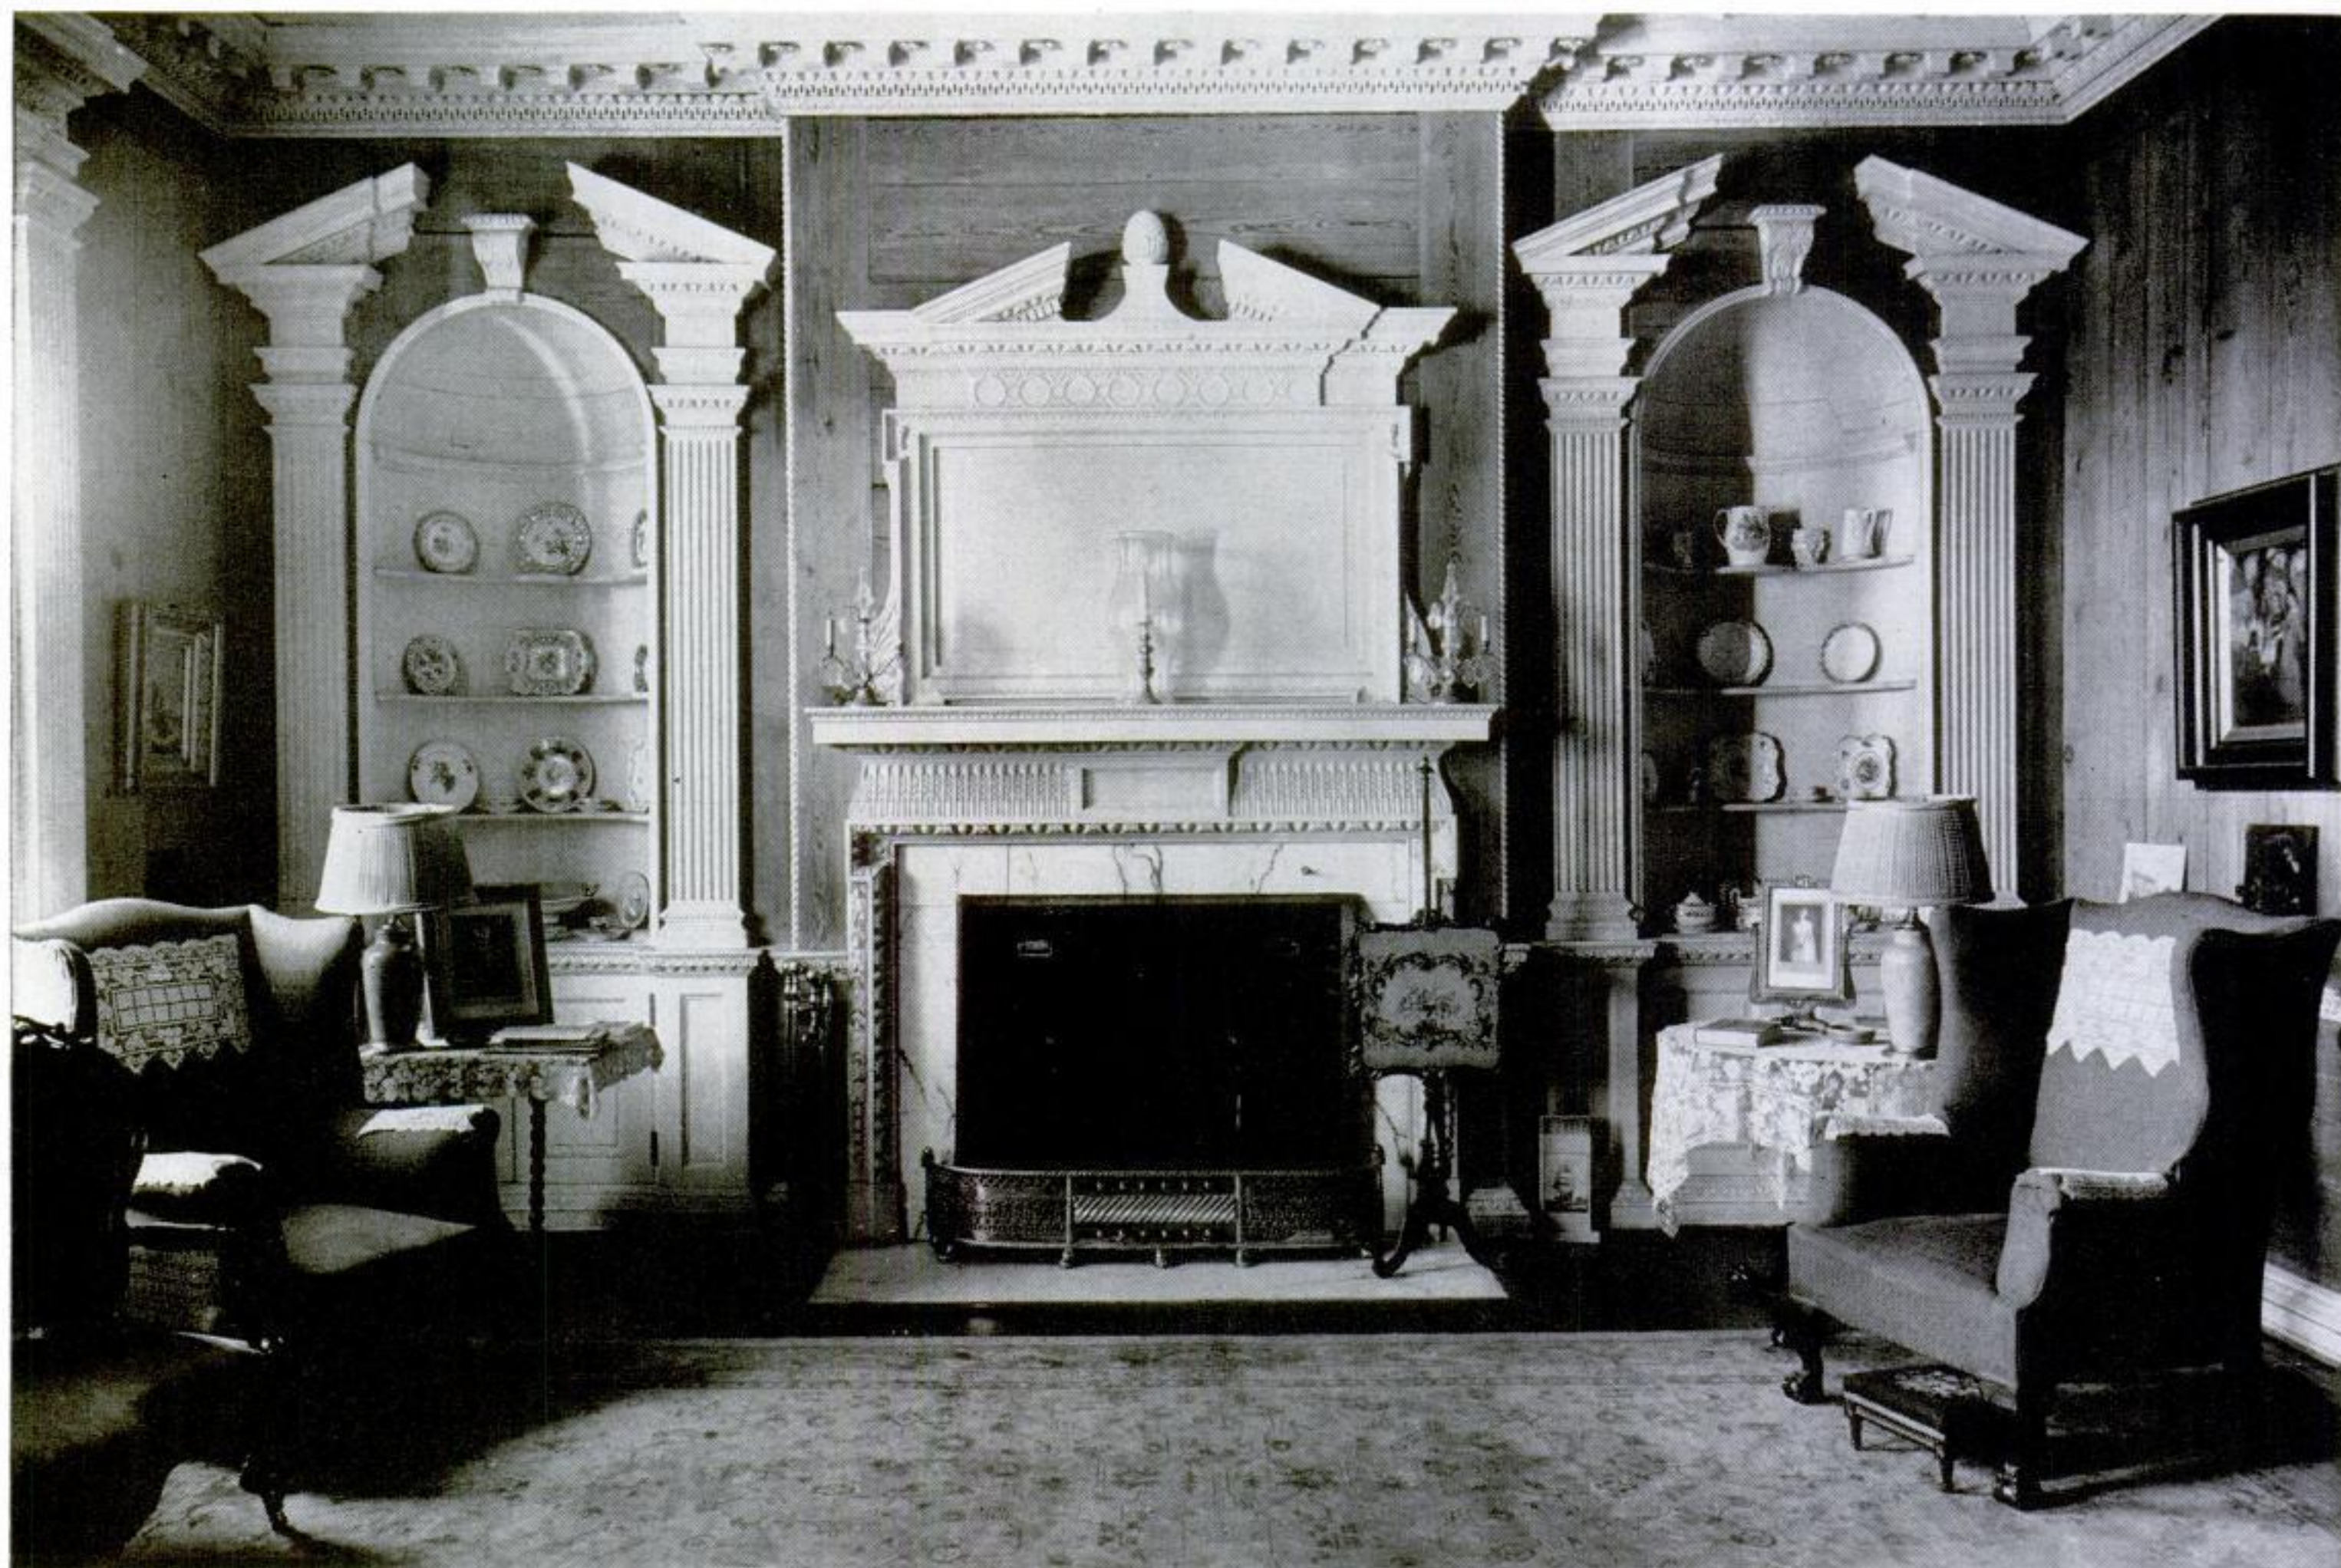

IV, was erected by a descendant. (Mason had five sons and four daughters.) Covered vault is that of Mason's wife. Hertle plans to give Gunston Hall to the State of Virginia when he dies.

The faded sheets over the fireplace in George Mason's own study are, says Owner Hertle, a copy of the Declaration of Rights in Mason's own hand. Two tobacco jars were also Mason's.

In George Mason's drawing room, fellow-farmers like George Washington, Thomas Jefferson and G. W. Fairfax often sat and talked. Owner Hertle scraped off many layers of paper to uncover pine-paneled walls. Mason probably covered the walls with silk hangings—tack holes are still visible. Rich carving of the mantel and alcoves is typical of luxurious colonial living.

AMBASSADOR HU SHIH

CHINA'S GREATEST LIVING SCHOLAR FIGHTS

A WINNING BATTLE OF WITS AGAINST JAPAN

by ERNEST O. HAUSER

When, three years ago, Dr. Hu Shih presented his credentials as Chinese Ambassador in Washington, no one could ask stupidly, "Who's Hu?" The Great Emissary of the Flowery People's-Country of the Middle (his official designation) was already one of the best-known Chinese on this side of the Pacific, where, as China's most distinguished scholar, outstanding educator and historian, he had represented his country and his people long before he came to represent his Government.

To Hu Shih himself, his official status is still somewhat accidental. "I have degenerated into an ambassador," he sometimes says, and his dual life provides him with a good deal of amusement. Hu Shih the scholar is so much better known than Hu Shih the diplomat that he is not surprised by letters like one he received last spring saying: "We should like to have Your Excellency give the commencement address at our university. If the affairs of state make this impossible, would you kindly tell us how to get in touch with that celebrated Chinese savant, Dr. Hu Shih, whom we would, in this case, like to ask instead?" Two years ago he sent a dinner invitation to T. V. Smith, Representative from Illinois, whom he had known well when both were lecturing at the University of Chicago. Smith came and the two had a most animated conversation. After an hour or two the Representative, to whom one Chinese face looked pretty much like another, asked the Ambassador: "Perhaps you could tell me what has become of that dear old friend of mine, Professor Hu Shih. Is he still around?" "In a way," said His Excellency, poker-faced. "You are dining with him tonight."

Washington officials and correspondents, when they meet Hu Shih, may expect to hear something about the Eighth Route Army and the scrap-iron situation. Instead, they often find themselves engrossed in a heated debate on immortality or a discussion of filial piety. This is in keeping with the somewhat unconventional conception of his functions which Hu Shih shares with his Government.

When Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek appointed his present ambassador to the U. S., he had a large list of able career diplomats to choose from. What suffering China needed, however, was a man who could find the way to the hearts of the American people without the tedious detour of ceremonies and protocol. For this endeavor, Hu Shih looked like a good bet and has proved to be one.

"Don't expect me to beg for money or to carry on propaganda," Hu Shih said to Chiang in 1937. So far, sometimes to the embarrassment of his Government, he has stuck to that. Once, during the first year of his ambassadorship, the Foreign Office in Chungking sent him $60,000 for propaganda purposes. Offended, he returned the check explaining: "My speeches are sufficient propaganda, and they don't cost you anything!"

Last week Japanese planes, swooping unexpectedly out of the skies over Hawaii, brought to a sudden end a strange diplomatic war in which Hu Shih had played a crucial role. Everything that happened between little Saburo Kurusu and the U. S. will not be known until after the war is over, but this much is certain: the U. S. was really tough and for the first time Japan suicidally faced up to a tough opponent. While the deadlock lasted, a rumor of appeasement had swept Washington. There was talk of concessions to Japan at the expense of China. It is unimportant that the rumor was false: what is important is that Hu Shih got wind of this supposed "deal." Had Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek been convinced of it, he might have made good his threat of a separate peace with Japan, for the best terms he could get, and the U. S. would now be without that valuable ally. But Hu Shih went, not to Chiang but to the White House and the State Department. For the first time in his diplomatic life, the soft-spoken scholar is reported to have lost his temper. He objected heatedly to any move that would play into the hands of Japan, he reminded the President of his many, freely given pledges to China. After Hu Shih's little-publicized visit was over, Roosevelt and Hull promptly spiked the dangerous rumor by calling the Japanese back to the White House and telling them flatly that the U. S. stood its ground. Hu Shih

In the Embassy office, Hu Shih personally clips all the papers, English and Chinese, for his huge files, can remember each clip. For years he has kept a detailed diary, spends an hour on it each night.

Hu Shih feeds the goldfish. The Embassy, known as "Twin Oaks" is rented from the family of the late Alexander Graham Bell. Dr. Hu says his squirrels are prettier than those at the White House.

MARK

had helped keep China and the U. S. together and won the greatest triumph of his career.

But during this hectic period, Hu Shih still found time to be a human being. Barging out of the Far Eastern Division in the State Department one afternoon last week, he bumped into a Japanese. Hu Shih recoiled. "So sorry," said the Japanese, "but aren't you Professor Hu? We met in Peking in 1935!" The two honorable enemies chatted peacefully for ten minutes.

When Hu Shih insisted that an ambassador should have nothing to do with loans and ammunition, the Chinese who needed both, had to send specialists to negotiate. One morning, Hu Shih found his Embassy so crowded with specialists, who had requisitioned even his desk and chair, that there was nothing for him to do but to go back to bed. Most prominent among the specialists is T. V. Soong, former Minister of Finance and foremost banker of the republic. T. V., more practical and less soft-spoken than Hu Shih, secured $100,000,000 credits for China last winter.

At Twin Oaks, the Victorian manor that serves as Hu Shih's residence and Embassy, the Ambassador shows visitors few evidences of his rank. He offers them a cup of that fragrant Dragon Well tea from Hangchow of which he is justly proud, and asks them to call him Dr. Hu rather than Mr. Ambassador. He is a slim man with graying hair, a smooth complexion and surprisingly warm eyes behind horn-rimmed spectacles. Educated at Cornell and Columbia, Hu Shih speaks perfect English and talks straight to the point without Oriental circumlocution.

He interprets East to West

Hu Shih's belief that his contributions as a scholar may outweigh his contributions, however valuable, as a diplomat, is justified by the facts. As a diplomat, he is currently engaged in interpreting East to West at a moment when this operation is of crucial consequence for the former. As a philosopher and literary reformer he had previously specialized in interpreting West to East, and in this he succeeded so well that along with Dr. Sun Yat-sen he can be considered largely responsible for the fact that China, in its present incarnation, exists at all. Sun Yat-sen was the political creator of democratic China. Hu Shih, to a considerable extent, supplied both its intellectual basis and the linguistic means whereby it came to be aware of its own existence.

Toward the end of the 19th Century, Western philosophers disgusted with Occidental materialism, took to holding up China as an example of the opposite. Buddha, Confucius, cricket fighting, the Mandarin court at Peking, pigtailed, bound feet, lotus buds and even chopsticks came to be regarded as different aspects of an admirable way of life characterized generally as "the wisdom of the Orient," and among certain well-fed European wise-men it was axiomatic that the 2,000-year-old civilization of China was, chiefly because of its very impracticality, miles ahead of anything to be seen outside of Asia. Hu Shih's first and greatest claim to posterity's attention is therefore the fact that he did more than any other single man to blast the myth out of existence, thereby enabling

China at long last to comb the bird's-nest soup out of its whiskers and wake up. Hu Shih pointed out what should have been obvious to anyone in the first place, that China's coolie labor, its miserable standard of living and its general backwardness were the result not of lofty idealism and mystic interest in the higher things of life but of inefficiency and decay.

Hu Shih's second contribution was not merely in keeping with his first but an example of it. Before his appearance on the scene, the wisdom of the Orient (such as it was) had always been expressed in a kind of picture language chiefly distinguished by the fact that practically no one understood it. Hu Shih saw that the first thing China needed was a new language that everyone understood. As a language reformer, Hu Shih's name deserves to go down to posterity along with those of Dante and Chaucer. Like them, he dignified as literature the popular speech of his time and place.

Hu Shih's campaign to revitalize the Chinese language started one day in his early childhood when he rummaged through his uncle's wastebasket and came upon the torn pages of a Chinese novel. He read it through fascinated, then scoured the village for more. The novels set him thinking. They were written not in the cryptic language of Confucius, the Mandarin dialect in which all Chinese "literature" was then composed, but in the highly dissimilar Chinese vulgate, the language of housewives, butchers, salt carriers, pawn-brokers, undertakers, sellers of dog meat, ricksha coolies, soldiers and farmers. Although novels had been published in this simple tongue for centuries, and although everybody read them with great gusto, Chinese scholars still ignored them, much as scholars in the Middle Ages ignored Italian until Dante used it in his Divina Commedia.

He is called "Father of the Chinese Renaissance"

Years later in the summer of 1916, when Hu Shih was a post-graduate student in New York, some of his Chinese friends went rowing on Lake Cayuga. A gale upset the boats and the party got a ducking. One of the boys, to immortalize this event, composed a poem in classic Chinese and sent it along to Hu Shih for criticism. The discrepancy between the subject and its presentation struck Hu Shih as so preposterous that he went home and wrote an article which he modestly entitled, "Some Tentative Suggestions for the Reform of Chinese Literature." He put it in an envelope and sent it back to China where it was published in a radical monthly. It won Hu Shih the nickname that will be connected with him for centuries: "Father of the Chinese Renaissance."

Back in China, he joined the faculty of China's National University at Peking at the age of 26. Its brainy, progressive teachers gave him enthusiastic support. His literary movement swept over the country, smashing the ideological monopoly of the privileged few who had spent their lives studying the classics, and who had used their knowledge to mislead 400,000,000 ignorant and poverty-ridden people.

The Chinese have no alphabet. Instead of writing "man" in three letters, they draw a little man, with two legs. The same goes for river, horse, tree and everything one can see or think. "Peace" is a woman under a roof, "goodness" a boy and a girl. To know 4,000 or 5,000 such characters means to have a fair command of the written language, although the number in existence is practically limitless. All writing is done in vertical, not horizontal, lines: to cover a sheet of rice paper with writing one puts the first character in the right upper corner.

When writing consists of drawing pictures, it is easy to be cryptic. The Chinese have always been fond of puzzles. For centuries writers had used their picture language to conceal rather than to reveal their meaning. For example, Confucius wrote, "Not Know Life How Know Death." Hu Shih used the same old characters but he began his reform of the written language by boldly writing out, "If you don't know anything about life, how can you understand the meaning of death?" In addition, he introduced into it a wealth of slang, borrowed from the vulgate and made presentable by using colloquial phrases and "vulgar" character combinations in his own writing. The result was a new language called pai-hua, meaning "clear talk."

By 1928 pai-hua was written and printed from one end of the vast country to the other. Mosquito newspapers, edited by students in pai-hua, clamored for a rebirth of China. Books were printed in pai-hua. Great popular novels, such as All Men Are Brothers, were suddenly recognized as "literature," and the new Government itself ordered school textbooks printed in pai-hua. Thus, together with Sun Yat-sen's political revolution, Hu Shih's literary revolution molded modern China.

"Here comes the Master!"

Hu Shih was born, 50 years ago this December, in Shanghai and brought up in his family's ancestral home in Anhwei Province. His father, Hu Chuan, a minor government official with a major interest in geography, was absent on prolonged journeys most of the time and died in faraway Formosa when his son was only 4. Hu Shih was sickly but precocious and his headstrong, ambitious mother, widowed at 23, took it upon herself to shape his mind and character. At the age of 3 he knew 800 Chinese characters and would not play with the other village children. "Here comes the Master," they shouted whenever he walked by with his books under his tiny arms. Later, the students at Cornell dubbed Hu Shih "Doc." Little Hu Shih was the first to knock at the teacher's door in the morning, asking for the keys to the school building.

Hu Shih was only 13 when he said goodbye to his proud mother and started for Shanghai—a journey of seven days—to get himself an education. At the great cosmopolitan treaty-port, he found himself face to face with a bewildering new world—the world of the West of which only faint rumors had reached the forgotten Anhwei village. Its onrush was overwhelming. Fascinated, the gawky youngster saw his rich and prominent countrymen mingle with the white-faced foreigners of Shanghai. He wanted to study—to study hard so that he could partake of the civilization of Europe and America.

He studied English, history, philosophy. He read Tolstoy, Dickens, Dumas, Rousseau. At 16 he was editor of a magazine called The Struggle in which he wrote iconoclastic articles damning superstition and bigotry. At times he was so poor that he had to quit studying and teach elementary English at $80 a month, sending his earnings home to his mother. He found friends as restless and as keen as himself, and they would sit up through whole nights, talking revolution and atheism, composing doleful poems, gambling for imaginary stakes and getting drunk on cheap liquor. One such bout and an ensuing fist fight with a policeman landed the young Hu in jail. Next morning, under the impact of a colossal hangover, he packed up and went to Peking where he passed the stiff exam that qualified him for a Boxer Indemnity scholarship at an American university. Before he left he adopted, according to Chinese custom, his manhood name. Significantly, he chose "shih" which stands for "fit" in the sense of Darwin's Survival of the Fittest. Hu, meaning Bearded Barbarian, is the family name. The full name Hu Shih (pronounced hoosh) sounds to a Chinese like "Where are you going?"

He sees his first football game

Hu Shih enrolled at Cornell in September 1910. He looked at the catalog and chose the School of Agriculture—because it offered scientific approach to farming, which China vastly needed, and because, since tuition was free, he would be able to send part of his scholarship money to his mother. His ability to adjust himself to his new environment was tested at his first American football game. He sat there with a stony face, raising his eyebrows at the childish antics of students who he felt should have been in the library instead. Then, slowly, the cheering of the crowd began to echo in him. He became interested in the game and actually rose from his seat to get a better view. At this moment he noticed his white-haired professor of botany who cheered wildly, yelling at the top of his lungs. Young Hu started yelling, too.

At the penalty of four semesters' pay, he transferred to the College of Arts and Sciences where he belonged and soon he attracted the attention of his professors. Conscientiously he kept a diary. The adventures of his student days, published in four volumes (1,200 pages), are still something like a best-seller in China. In 1915, after majoring in philosophy, he went to New York for post-graduate work under John Dewey at Columbia. Hu Shih still believes that, intellectually speaking, Dewey made a man of him. His dissertation on "The Development of Logical Method in Ancient China" brought him the only doctor's degree he ever honestly worked for. His other 17 are honorary.

Hu Shih got his first job as professor of philosophy at Peking's National University the year he returned from his studies in the U. S. Five years later he was dean of English Literature, and he has spent most of the intervening years in Chinese classrooms. In 1927 he left Peking for Shanghai to teach at Kwang Hua University and, shortly after his return to the treaty port, was elected president of the National China Institute at Woosung near Shanghai. His lifelong ambition, however, was not fulfilled until 1930 when he went back to Peking as Dean of the School of Literature—a position which made him literary pundit of all China and which he surrendered only to become Ambassador to the U. S.

Curiously, Hu Shih, the revolutionary, is a conservative in his personal life. Although he had found a charming and beautiful companion in the person of a Chinese girl student from Vassar (she used to visit him at Cornell where he rowed her across the lake, talking philosophy), he dutifully married the girl his mother had chosen for him when he was only 11. Tung-hsiu—the name means Winter Elegance—possesses all the virtues a Chinese wife, according to tradition, should have. She does her chores around the house with friendly forbearance, dislikes gaudy clothes and is an excellent cook—her meat-filled dumplings were famous all over Peking. She loves and admires her husband who taught her to read and write, but thinks he's too ambitious: it took him months to convince her that it was all right for him to accept the appointment as ambassador. Tung-hsiu does not speak English; instead in the presence of foreign guests she often covers her face with one of her wide sleeves and shyly giggles. Her feet were bound when she was little, as the brutal custom demanded. Then, when the new era of freedom dawned, they were unbound just in time to enable her to walk without pain.

The philosopher in Peking

The best time Hu Shih ever had were the happy years in Peking which Japan's invasion ended so abruptly. He had rented a "foreign-style" house just north of the famous Coal Hill, near the ancient Drum Tower, and under the transparent blue sky of the old imperial city, life seemed sweet and serene. Sometimes, on a clear autumn day, an excursion to the Ming tombs or to a silent monastery in the Western Mountains interrupted the routine. But the routine itself was far from humdrum. After teaching, Hu Shih would come home with a few friends and they would go on discussing problems of history and philosophy until someone discovered that it was dinnertime. "Oh, no, you mustn't go," the Professor would say, "our conversation has only begun!" And Mrs. Hu would have to serve dinner for eight. After everyone had left, Hu Shih retired to his study which was connected with the huge, open-stack library (he employed a special "librarian" servant) and time stood still while he was bent over his books. Sometimes, around 2 in the morning, Tung-hsiu would pad in on silent soles with a little snack, consisting of a glass of wine and a very Chinese delicacy: the renowned "ancient eggs," of which the hungry scholar could eat astounding quantities.

Hu Shih misses the pleasures of a home these days. When he asked Tung-hsiu to accompany him to Washington, she softly shook her head: her presence would only embarrass him. Their two sons are in the U. S. Tsu-wang is a senior at Cornell, studying to be an engineer: Sze-tu has just entered Cornell as a freshman. But Mrs. Hu unyieldingly stays in Shanghai, thinking of the days in Peking as one thinks of a lost dream. And Hu Shih sometimes looks up when he sits in his Washington study, around 2 o'clock in the morning, waiting for someone to slip in with some eggs and a glass of wine.

In contrast to the convivial house by the Drum Tower, the household at Twin Oaks is sedate and a bit somber. He shares the large mansion with Liu Chieh, Counselor, and Embassy Secretary Yu and his wife. The language spoken is Mandarin, the northern dialect which has become the national language of the educated. Hu Shih speaks it with a pronounced Anhwei accent, the Chinese equivalent of a North Carolina drawl. Dress is "foreign-style," although he occasionally dons a blue or gray Chinese silk gown for greater comfort. There are some American servants and, very important, a Chinese cook.

Hu Shih's favorite dish is the Anhwei Pot: a huge casserole, with a thick layer of fat pork meat at the bottom, upon which are piled a layer of bamboo sprouts, another layer of pork, a layer of bean curds, a layer of chicken and a spread of vegetables. The pot is sealed tight and the cooking, over a slow fire, takes all day. Hu's lunch and dinner are usually Chinese but he likes American breakfasts of orange juice, toast and scrambled eggs.

Hu rises late and neither the Yus nor Liu are in the habit of waiting breakfast for him. He sits down alone and reads his papers till around 11, when he drifts into the chancery. This is a stuffy little brick building on the corner of Vernon and 19th Streets. During the morning he answers mail, receives visitors and may drive over to the State Department or the White House. For luncheon, which is taken very late, he returns to Twin Oaks. There he usually spends the afternoon, receiving the endless stream of callers which flows through the wide gate. Hu Shih, who enjoys nothing so much as the click of his own wisecracks, never tires of visitors. Many are ranking scholars, American and foreign, who would consider a visit to Washington incomplete if they had not paid their respects to the Father of the Chinese Renaissance. Large parties are not to his liking—his recent reception for China's Foreign Minister Quo Tai-chi, at which 750 people gathered, was exceptional. Guests often complain about the scarcity of drinks. The host himself imbibes with caution.

Hu Shih is popular with Washington's ladies. One of them, a young woman from the Midwest, once asked him: "Just what does your work consist of, Mr. Ambassador?" "Oh," said Hu Shih, "95% is social." "Really?" chirped the girl, "and what about the other 5%?" "Come to think of it," said the Ambassador, "that is social, too." This is one of the stories he relates himself, for Dr. Hu Shih derives a wry pleasure from telling stories on Ambassador Hu Shih. His "social" activities, however, have recently included such events as an address before the Merchants' Association of New York, a paper read before the American Historical Association, a lecture at Yale University on Chinese painting, a chat at the Library of Congress on the adventures of a Chinese book collector, a dinner speech at the Union League Club, and miscellaneous addresses on the campuses of a dozen different universities. Yet, in spite of his scholarly self, Hu Shih has managed to acquire some of the technical knowledge necessary to carry on martial conversations, and to hear him explain the functions of a Flying Fortress—the one type of plane with which China could bomb Japan—is a rare treat to those who like to take their World War II with a dash of philosophy.

During all stages of his ascendant career, Hu Shih has written profusely. His published works include a History of Living Literature, The Philosophy of Tai Chen, an Anthology of Chinese Songs, a book on The Life and Works of the Monk Shen Hui, a vast number of essays and hundreds of poems in the vernacular. He has edited various magazines, both literary and political, and he has been instrumental in translating the classics of Europe into Chinese. He has Confucius at his fingertips and he composes poems both in the classic and the spoken language. His penmanship, an important ingredient of the Chinese gentleman, is admired by his countrymen.

MIDDLE FLOWERY PEOPLE COUNTRY STATIONED

This is Hu Shih's official title in Chinese characters, with literal translation. In the Chinese language, based on ancient but much modified picture symbols, each character makes up an ideograph. In "middle," this is accomplished simply by drawing a brush stroke through the middle of a square, but "stationed" is more complicated. The left

He is an agnostic, although as a student he came close to embracing Christianity. His intense pacifism has in the past led some Chinese patriots to denounce him as a traitor. As early as in 1916 he wrote an essay entitled "Is there a Substitute for Force in International Relations?" and a year before he had been one of the founders of the Collegiate League for the Abolition of Militarism. At present he angrily admits that "the aggressors cannot be appeased because they are insatiable."

Empires, says Hu Shih, are conquered on horseback; but can they be governed on horseback? No, they can only be governed by wise men. The illustrious scholar claims the right to criticize the rulers on horseback, even if they happen to rule his own country. For years he was opposed to Chiang Kai-shek's one-party government, and his stinging attacks appeared in the columns of the Independent Critic, which he edited. He would mince no words, and even during his frequent trips to America he told everyone in sight that Chiang Kai-shek was an unscrupulous dictator trampling the rights of the people underfoot and surrounding himself with incompetent, vicious and corrupt yes-men. So embarrassing were these outbursts that in 1936, when Hu Shih attended the Yosemite Conference of the Institute of Pacific Relations as head of the Chinese delegation, the local authorities in Peking decided to close his magazine and to hold a warrant of arrest ready for him, just in case.

He forgets his quarrel with Chiang Kai-shek

When he returned to China, however, big things were happening and personal squabbles had lost their significance. Japanese provocations had reached a point where even the most forbearing Chinese could no longer turn the other cheek. War was imminent and Chiang Kai-shek, suspicious of his party-line yes-men, suddenly decided on an unusual step: he would gather his most outspoken critics around him to hear whether it was to be peace or war, compromise or resistance. Hu Shih accepted the invitation and left Peking with its transparent blue sky and the golden roofs of the Forbidden City. He has not seen it again, for three weeks after he left the flag with the Rising Sun went up over its staunch old walls.

The scholar and the soldier shook hands (their own, Chinese fashion). They decided to bury the hatchet. So impressed was Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek with Hu Shih's sincerity and deeprooted patriotism that he sent him back to the U. S.—first on a "listening mission," then, after a brief visit to Europe, as Ambassador. He knew that he was taking a chance. Hu Shih wanted broad authority and little responsibility. If he saw fit to criticize his government some more, he would do so, even as Ambassador to the U. S. He does—quite often. During the first year of his mission he frequently embarrassed his government by refusing to paint the military situation in rosy colors. In December 1938 he thus opened a formal address in New York: "If I were asked to sum up in one sentence the present conditions in my country, I would not hesitate to say that China is literally bleeding to death." This was interpreted as a bid for peace and nearly caused his recall. Hu Shih never knew of the reaction his words had brought forth because after the speech he collapsed with a serious heart attack and when he left Harkness Pavilion, 77 days later, the excitement had died down. To this day, however, he has refused to join the Kuomintang Party—which brands him as a rebel in the eyes of Chungking's bureaucrats. He bluntly tells them that, if party membership should ever become a prerequisite for a career in politics, China would cease to be a democracy. For this argument the veterans of Sun Yat-sen's revolution have no comeback.

part of the character means "horse" and the right "innkeeper." Combined they mean "stopping place" or "station." America is the character for "beautiful," pronounced "mei." Phonetically, this is the closest Chinese can come to the foreign name "America." "People's country" means republic, the rest "ambassador plenipotentiary to the U. S."

The democratic Hu Shih is a bit of a snob. At a commencement address last June he told the boys and girls that "as university graduates, you are expected to be a little different. You will be expected to talk strangely and to behave queerly. . . . It is not a bad thing for us college graduates always to retain a wee bit of that distinctive mark." He, the poor village boy who worked his way up to a place among the world's leading scholars, is rightly proud of that achievement. With this pride goes a certain contempt for the "crowd" that shows up quite unexpectedly. One of his students once showed him his English translation of something Hu Shih had written in the vernacular. Hu Shih was horrified at the slang expressions the student had used, although he had to admit that they were the exact equivalents of his Chinese phrases.

His very snobbishness makes Hu Shih unpopular with his American compatriots, the citizens of Chinatown. They have invited him time and again to participate in their festivals and ceremonies, and time and again he has told them "too busy" and sent a secretary of the Embassy. As the Hu clan is to be found largely in Anhwei Province, and as most of the Chinatown families, such as the Lees, Chongs and Wongs, are Cantonese, the Hus are not represented in Chinatown—which makes the Ambassador virtually a foreign devil, anyhow.

Today, as in his early childhood, Hu Shih is sociable without being gregarious. He is not one of the boys, does not like to be patted on the back and avoids calling people by their first names. He does not play golf or tennis. In his professorial days he used to be better than average at mah-jong, but nowadays never plays more than four rounds instead of the ten or twelve he used to enjoy. At chess, both Chinese and Occidental, he acknowledges the superiority of his younger son, but occasionally beats him. He has no hobbies, except collecting match-books and honorary degrees. The match-book collection is locked up in a large suitcase and shown only to intimate friends; the degree collection is the third or fourth largest in the world and includes such prizes as a Litt. D. from Harvard, LL.D.'s from Yale, Columbia, Chicago, California—and Hong Kong.

Hu Shih's chauffeur is under orders to keep picking up afternoon papers until late, and five or six editions of the same paper may pile up before nightfall. He still likes to browse in secondhand book stores, and he marks his books furiously. When he came to this country in 1937 aboard the Pacific Clipper (on a special mission, prior to his appointment as Ambassador) he carried only one book: a two-ounce rice-paper copy of Mencius, the ancient Chinese sage whose saying, "When a ruler treats his subject like grass and dirt then the subject should treat him as a bandit and enemy," is one of Hu Shih's favorite quotations. He abhorred modern fiction until a friend loaned him a copy of Gone With the Wind. He read it from cover to cover and now subscribes to the Book-of-the-Month Club. He does not care for music, dislikes contemporary painting and seldom goes to the theater. The last movie he has seen is The Great Dictator, which amused him.

After four years of political chores, Hu Shih has begun to miss his research and his writing. He would like to settle down again for a long stretch of scientific work, during which he could complete The History of Chinese Literature and The History of Chinese Philosophy. The latter, an expansion of his Ph. D. thesis, is closest to his heart; the first volume, published in Chinese, has already sold seven editions. He also misses his classes, the stimulating contact with young people.

But for the time being, relief is not in sight. The Flowery People's Country of the Middle has drafted its finest scholar for the duration, and he will have to play Ambassador as long as the emergency lasts. Those who meet him begin to understand why the Chinese, after four years of "pitting human flesh and blood and human courage against mechanical and metal equipment," still refuse to give in. They understand why 400,000,000 people, as tough, as wise, and as confident as their Ambassador, cannot be defeated. His country's national unity, Hu Shih says modestly, is of 21 centuries of making—a few years of slaughter cannot destroy it.

When Milwaukee's

nearest neighbor was Moscow

SCARCELY A WHISPER of breeze drifted in from Lake Michigan; the quarter moon glowed yellowly in a clear, quiet sky.

But . . . in thousands of Milwaukee homes that night—as in every city and village throughout America—folks were seeing how the skies of another city were being rent by zenith guns, tracer bullets, parachute flares, Nazi bombs. That other city was Moscow—now, in a shrunken and interdependent world, Milwaukee's neighbor. A neighbor whose fate had become Milwaukee's deep and personal concern.

VANISHING BOUNDARY LINES

Milwaukeeans were seeing, learning, feeling all this together about Moscow's fight. For it was Friday night, and they were getting the story—as they could in no other way—from the pages of LIFE. Pages alive with the vivid, picture-and-word news reporting that is LIFE's and only LIFE's.

This unique editorial technique is expanding enormously the vision, the interests, the knowledge of millions in every corner of America. Opening their eyes and minds as does nothing else under the sun!

21,900,000 Americans read LIFE every week—eagerly soaking up information about this fast-moving, closely knit, highly explosive world we live in . . . a world where it matters very much in Wisconsin what's happening thousands of miles away on the Volga.

BEYOND THE WARS

And not only on the Volga . . . on the Nile . . . or on the Yellow River. What's happening in other worlds—Science, Art, Government, Religion—matters very much to these millions, too . . . because of LIFE.

For LIFE's brilliant new-age journalism makes information about all the forces that move and shape our lives easy to understand and absorb—and infinitely exciting. In doing this, LIFE helps great masses of people come to grips with the world as it really is—helps them make more intelligent decisions.

Thus, has LIFE clearly established its position as "America's Most Potent Editorial Force." And also, logically, as the most potent selling force in which a magazine advertiser can invest his dollars.

PILOT OF THE "WHITEMAN" LOOKS OVER BARGE TOW TOWARD RAILROAD BRIDGE AT PEKIN, ILL. NEAR HERE "WHITEMAN" NEARLY TURNED OVER WHEN BARGE STUCK ON BAR

Life Goes on a Barge Trip

and visits "Steamboat Elsie," queen of the Inland Waterways

One starlit night this fall LIFE Photographer Myron Davis went aboard the trim little towboat William M. Rees at Hartford, Ill., a few miles up the Mississippi from St. Louis. Lashed to the front of the Rees, in a long projecting line, were five barges loaded with sugar, paper and oil—4,000 tons in all. On up river puffed the Rees, its steel sides shaking and rumbling with the strain of pushing the equivalent of two loaded 60-car freight trains against the current.

It chugged past the historic hulk of the steamboat Betsy Ann; past the mouth of the Missouri near Alton and high cliffs beyond; past snorting sand diggers and a gay showboat calliope. At Grafton it turned into the Illinois River and pushed on to Beardstown, where it transferred barges and Photographer Davis to the Stark D. Whiteman, a converted Coast Guard cutter. With less power and less balance, the Whiteman made only three miles an hour, against the Rees's four, nudged its bulky load onto sand bars three times. Once, near Pekin, Ill., it pulled so hard getting off a bar it nearly turned over. Davis and the crew prepared to jump, for the Whiteman has already sunk four times. But it righted and went on past the distilleries and waterfront dives of Peoria, past the lighthouse of "Steamboat Elsie" at Henry (see pp. 141-143), through the Des Plaines River to the reeking Chicago Sanitary and Ship Canal, finally pulling up at 2700 South Robinson Street, Chicago, after a routine eight-day trip.

The "Whiteman's" tow, broken in halves, in deep lock at Lockport, Ill. St. Louis-Chicago route is an important link in the Lakes-to-Gulf Waterway, completed in 1933.

Locks and Bridges Break Monotony of Trip

Once their tow is lashed in place and their boat starts on its slow, chugging way, the deck hands have little to do until a barge runs aground, or they reach a lock. There are eight locks between St. Louis and Chicago. Putting the barges through these involves hours of grueling work. The tow must be broken in half, because the locks are not long enough to take it in a straight line. The halves are fastened side by side in the lock (see picture above) and re-assembled on the other side. Steering the long, stiff line of barges between the supports of a bridge like the one shown below is also hard work, which largely falls on the pilot. The boats run night and day, stopping only for fuel, locks and accidents. On quiet days the crew play poker on deck. At Peoria they like to go ashore for whisky.

Bridge at Meredosia, Ill. is closed behind the Rees. Nearly $1,000,000,000 has been spent on U. S. waterways since 1920. They now carry more freight than ever in history.

From her side porch Steamboat Elsie waves to passing boatmen. When she shows a red flag, they must stop for megaphone message or, sometimes, send boat to shore.

Every boat must whistle to Steamboat Elsie

Close to the river bank at Henry, Ill. lives motherly Elsie Longman, known to all rivermen as "Steamboat Elsie." In 1934, when an old drawbridge was torn down, Elsie wrote the Inland Waterway Corporation that she was sorry the boats no longer whistled at Henry. The company ordered its boats to salute her with a special whistle. Elsie and her husband moved to the river bank, where she began keeping a 24-hour-a-day log of passing boats. Now captains on all lines have orders to whistle to Elsie. If she waves a red flag they stop and often send a boat to her landing, where she turns over important messages, telegrams, and sometimes a wandering deck hand who missed the boat at the last stop.

Steamboat Elsie and husband look out over placid Illinois River. He built the 20-ft. lighthouse from river stones. Pilot wheel was gift of a friendly captain from Alton.

BARE AND COOLER

Sirs:

The latest fashion among the British soldiers in the Western Desert is to have their hair completely shaved off. They say that eliminating the hair makes the heat less troublesome and banishes the nuisance of sand in the scalp. The shaven soldiers do not fear the effects of the sun's rays because the regulation helmet gives adequate protection.

These pictures were made when a sergeant found one man in his unit who needed the customary "close trim."

Car engineers "turn on the heat"—and the cold—in testing spark plugs for equipment use

Those plugs in your automobile took a terrific beating before the car engineers okayed them for equipment. They were scorched in top speed, non-stop runs in the desert in midsummer. They were required to snap frosted engines into instant life in the Arctic chill of "cold rooms." They were made to run the gantlet of proving ground and laboratory torture. And this goes on all year long,—every year!

So, when you find AC Spark Plugs used more than any others for new car equipment, it means something. It means reliability, efficiency, full value for the money. It means, in plain language, that you can be sure of best plug satisfaction when you drive with AC's.

The Quality Spark Plug

Buick, Cadillac, Chevrolet, Nash, Oldsmobile, and Pontiac motor cars; Chevrolet, Corbitt, Diamond T, Federal, GMC, International, and Sterling trucks; Allis-Chalmers, J. I. Case, Cletrac, and International Harvester tractors...these are some of the well-known cars, trucks and tractors which use AC Quality Spark Plugs. Trust your spark plug requirements to the same brand of spark plugs which the leading, big volume manufacturers select.

ENTERPRISING PAINTER

Sirs:

LIFE once portrayed a one-armed paper hanger. Now take a look at this one-legged painter. I noticed this man plying his trade at a restaurant in Barstow, Calif. He was not a resident of Barstow but a wandering painter who worked from town to town as jobs popped up, and apparently made a living in spite of his handicap. He traveled with his family in a Model-T Ford.

Sirs:

Ann Arbor's fire department recently performed the rescue stunt pictured below. The building was not on fire. It seems that Dr. Ross J. Blue locked his keys inside his sixth-floor office. Rather than break down the door, it was decided to call the ladder squad to attack the problem from the outside. Result was a workout for the fire department and successful recovery of the keys without damage to building property.
